PREFACE

THE interest and importance of the Book of Judges lie chiefly in the knowledge which it gives us of the state of society and religion in Israel in the early centuries of its settlement in Palestine, for which Judges and Samuel are our only sources. In addition to this, parts of the book are of preëminent historical value: in particular, ch. 1, which contains by far the oldest and most trustworthy account of the invasion of Canaan; and ch. 5, the Song of Deborah, the only contemporary monument of Israelitish history before the Kingdom. In the following commentary matters of history, antiquities, and especially the social and religious life of the people in this period, are properly given the largest place; not only for their intrinsic interest, but because the knowledge of these things is indispensable to any right understanding of the history of Israel and of its religion. The work of the prophets can only be comprehended in its relation to the national religion of Israel. But before there was a national religion, there was a common religion of the Israelite tribes which was one of the most potent forces in the making of the nation. What this religion was, which they brought with them into Canaan, and what changes it underwent in contact with Canaanite civilization and the religions of the land, we learn in no small part from the Book of Judges; while here and there, as in the Song of Deborah, we have glimpses of a remoter past, the adoption of the religion of Yahweh by the tribes at Horeb, the work of Moses.

To make such a use of the book, it is necessary to distinguish carefully between the work of the principal author, who wrote in the 6th century B.C., separated from the times of the judges by as many centuries as lie between us and the crusades, and the much older sources from which the stories of the judges themselves are derived. We must also, as far as possible, define the age and character of these sources, which are not all of the same antiquity or historical value. Nor is it solely on historical grounds that this is required. The difficulties which the interpreter finds in the book are in considerable part of a kind for which exegesis and textual criticism have no solution. They have arisen from the changes and additions which the author made in transcribing his sources, or from the attempt to combine and harmonize two parallel but slightly different versions of the same story, and can be cleared up only by ascertaining how this was done. Criticism is thus not only obligatory upon the historian, it is an essential part of the work of the exegete. That the task is delicate and difficult, and in the nature of the case largely conjectural, cannot exempt the commentator from trying to solve these knotty questions. At the worst, the uncertainties of criticism are infinitely preferable to the exegetical violence which is the only alternative. In the commentary, especially in the introductions to the several stories, I have discussed the particular problems of criticism with such fulness as they seemed to demand; in the Introduction (§ 3-6) the reader will find set forth the general results to which these investigations lead.

The Hebrew text of Judges, with the exception of part of ch. 5, is comparatively well preserved; but in very many places the ancient versions have a better reading, or a variant which may not be neglected. The Greek translations of this book are of peculiar interest, and perhaps nowhere in the Old Testament can the difficult problems which this version presents be approached with more hope of illuminating results. I trust that the somewhat full registration of the readings of G in this commentary may not be unwelcome to students of the Greek as well as of the Hebrew Bible. An edition of the Hebrew text, with critical apparatus, is in preparation, and will shortly appear in "The Sacred Books of the Old Testament," edited by Professor Paul Haupt.

In the philological notes, I have been mindful of the fact that it is the commentator's duty, not to follow the lexicographer and the grammarian, but to precede them; and have investigated afresh, and as far as possible exhaustively, all questions of etymology, usage, and construction which seemed to require it. If, in many cases, I cannot flatter myself that these investigations have added much light, they have often performed at least the negative service of showing that commonly accepted interpretations are unsound. In the hope that the commentary may be used to some extent by students, for whose reading the Book of Judges is peculiarly well suited, some notes of a more elementary character on the forms of words and on grammatical points have been added.

In conformity with the general plan of the series, all matters of textual criticism and Hebrew philology, together with more detailed and technical discussions of points of criticism, antiquities, and topography, have been kept apart from the body of the commentary, and will be found in smaller type at the end of the paragraphs. It is one of the evils of this arrangement that the grounds of an interpretation must often be sought in another place from the interpretation itself, while in other instances some repetition is unavoidable. It is believed, however, that the separation will prove convenient to many who may use the commentary; and I have endeavoured to diminish its disadvantages by cross-references and full indexes.

I have tried to make good use of all that has been done hitherto for the criticism and interpretation of the book. The commentators whom I have chiefly consulted are named in the Introduction, § 9, the critics at the end of § 6; other works are referred to in the foot-notes of the commentary. It is not improbable that, in this extensive and scattered literature, I may have overlooked some things of importance; I have not intentionally ignored any. Several books of great value have appeared during the printing of this volume, so that I have, to my regret and loss, been able to use them only in the later chapters; among these I may name particularly Benzinger, Hebräische Archäologie, 1894; Nowack, Lehrbuch der Hebräischen Archäologie, 1894; G. A. Smith, Historical Geography of the Holy Land, 1894; and the 12th edition of Gesenius' Handwörterbuch, thoroughly revised by Buhl, 1895.

A list of the principal abbreviations employed will be found on p. 474. They conform, by the editors' desire, to those used in the new Hebrew Lexicon, in course of publication under the editorship of Professors Brown, Driver, and Briggs. The references in the commentary have been carefully verified, and will, I trust, be found accurate. In the few instances in which I have not been able to consult a book which is cited, the fact is indicated by a (°) affixed to the title. The citations of Scripture in the body of the commentary follow the chapter and verse numeration of the Authorized Version as given in the Queen's Printer's Bible; in the critical notes the verses are those of the Hebrew Bible (Van der Hooght's ed., 1705).

It is a pleasant duty to acknowledge the assistance which I have received in the preparation of this volume from my colleague and friend, Dr. Charles C. Torrey, Instructor in the Semitic Languages in Andover Theological Seminary, who has read nearly all the proofs, and to whom I am indebted for some valuable suggestions and corrections.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. Title. Place of the Book in the Canon.

THE title, JUDGES, or, THE BOOK OF JUDGES, which the book bears in the Jewish and Christian Bibles,* is given to it because it relates the exploits of a succession of Israelite leaders and champions who, in the book itself as well as in other parts of the Old Testament, are called Judges.† The signification of the Hebrew word is, however, much wider than that of the Greek κριτής, the Latin judex, or the English 'judge.' The verb shāphať is not only judicare,‡ but vindicare, both in the sense of 'defend, deliver,' and in that of 'avenge, punish.'§ The participle shōphet is not only judex, but vindex, and is not infrequently synonymous with 'deliverer.'|| Again, as the administration of justice was, in times of peace, the most important function of the chieftain or king, the noun is sometimes equivalent to 'ruler,'¶ and the verb signifies, 'rule, govern.' In this sense it is most natural to take it in the lists of Minor Judges, where we read, for example of Tola: He judged Israel twenty-three years. . . . And after him arose Jair, the Gileadite, and judged Israel twenty-two years.** It is clear that the writer regarded these judges as a succession of chiefs, who arose in different parts of the land, ruling with an authority which was personal and not hereditary.* The same conception is probably to be recognized in 2<sup>17</sup>, the Israelites would not obey their judges. The word 'judge' is not used of Ehud, Barak, or Gideon, and seems not to have been found in the oldest of the author's sources.† The title, Book of Judges, was in all probability meant by those who prefixed it to the book to correspond to that of the Book of Kings; the judges were the succession of rulers and defenders of Israel before the hereditary monarchy, as the kings were afterwards. ‡

In the Hebrew Bible the Book of Judges stands in the first division of the Prophets, the Prophetic Histories (Jos., Jud., Sam., Kings), § which narrate continuously the history of Israel from the invasion of Canaan to the fall of Jerusalem (586 B.C.). In the Greek Bible, Ruth is appended to it, sometimes under one title (κριταί), sometimes under its own name; and in manuscripts, the Pentateuch, together with Joshua, Judges, and Ruth, frequently forms a codex (Octateuch). || In the history of Israel before the exile, Judges covers the time from the close of the period of conquest and occupation with the death of Joshua to the beginning of the struggle with the Philistines in the days of Eli. ¶ A better division, from our point of view, would have been the establishment of the kingdom of Saul, and there is some evidence that, in one at least of the older histories which our author had before him, Eli and Samuel were reckoned among the judges; ** but as Samuel is the central figure in the story of the founding of the * Others of them besides Jephthah (11<sup>8-11</sup>) and Gideon may have obtained this power by successful leadership in war.

‡ Whether this title was first given to the canonical Judges, or to one of its predecessors, is not certain. — In the sense indicated above the word Judge is understood by Fl. Jos. (στρατηγοί, ἄρχοντες, μονάρχαι, αυτοκράτορες ἡγεμόνες, — Ba.), Stud., Reuss (Heldenbuch), al. Book of the Deliverers of Israel, Ephr. Syr., Bachmann, Köhler, al. kingdom, it was not unnatural to begin a new book with his birth. The character of the two works shows conclusively that Judges was not composed by the author of Samuel; the peculiar religious interpretation of the history which is impressed so strongly on Judges is almost entirely lacking in Samuel.*

Ephrem, i. p. 308. The book was also known by its Hebrew title, Shāphṭe or Shāphṭē (<sup>PLH</sup>, BO. iii. 1. p. 5, 62, 71, &c.), which was early corrupted to Shabḥē, as if from שֹׁב, tribe; † so in <sup>A</sup>, see Ephrem, l. s. c. — Sufetes, qui summus Poenis est magistratus (Liv., xxviii. 37); quod velut consulare imperium apud eos erat (ib. xxx. 7, of Carthage; cf. xxxiv. 61). In Latin inscriptions from Africa we learn of the sufetes of a number of cities (CIL. viii. No. 7, 765, 10525); sometimes two are named (ib. No. 797, 5306). שוש occurs frequently in inscriptions, ‡ but it is in most cases uncertain whether ordinary judges or chief magistrates are meant. In Spain and Sardinia (Cagliari), the governors and petty kings were in the Middle Ages called judices (Ducange, s.v.), § in which we may be disposed to see a survival from the times of the Phoenician rule. The sufetes of Carthage and the Punic colonies were a regular magistracy, and belong to a much more highly organized political society than the shōphetim of the O.T. We might rather compare the δικασται who held the supreme power at Tyre for brief periods during an interregnum in the 6th cent. B.C. (Fl. Jos., c. Ap. i. 21 § 157). ||

Chapters 2<sup>6-1631</sup> constitute the body of the work, to which alone the title, Book of Judges, in strictness applies. Ch. 17-21 is an appendix, relating two important events of the period preceding the establishment of the kingdom.* As we find in these chapters no trace of the distinctive historical theories, or the strongly marked style, of the author of 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup>, we may confidently infer that these two stories were not appended to his book by himself, but by some later hand.† Ch. 1, as interpreted by 2<sup>1-5</sup>, forms a fitting introduction to the present book, showing how the old inhabitants were left in possession of the chief cities of Canaan. Their religion became a snare to the invaders; and thus the culpable failure to extirpate people and gods together was the prime cause of all the evils that befell Israel in the following generations. But although, in this light, 1<sup>1-2</sup><sup>5</sup> is a very good beginning for the book, it cannot have been prefixed by the author of 2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>31</sup>, whose own extended introduction (2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>6</sup>) not only takes no notice of 1<sup>1-2</sup><sup>5</sup>, but by its connexion with Jos. formally excludes it.‡ Like the appendix, 17-21, therefore, 1<sup>1-2</sup><sup>5</sup> must have been introduced by a compiler or editor later than the author of 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup>.

§ 3. The History of the Judges, ii. 6-xvi. 31. Character and age. §

In the Introduction (2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>6</sup>), the author gives a comprehensive survey of the history of the entire period. The generation which had seen all the great work of Yahweh, in Egypt, in the desert, and in the conquest of Canaan (2<sup>7</sup>), remained true to him; but after the death of Joshua and his contemporaries, Israel fell away from Yahweh, the God of their fathers, and worshipped the Baals and Astartes, the gods of the nations about them. Indignant at this unfaithfulness, Yahweh gave them into the power of their enemies, who subjugated and oppressed them. Moved by their distress, Yahweh repeatedly raised up leaders (judges) who delivered them from their foes.* But they persisted in the worship of other gods, or relapsed into it when the judge was dead; each generation was worse than those before it. Neither punishment nor deliverance wrought any lasting amendment. The history of each of the judges begins with a few sentences telling us how the Israelites offended Yahweh; how he gave them into the power of this or that hostile people for a number of years; and how he at last raised up a deliverer.† The introductions to the stories of Gideon (6<sup>1-10</sup>) and Jephthah (10<sup>6-16</sup>) are longer, and the moral is enforced in the words of a prophet, or of Yahweh himself, upbraiding the Israelites for their disobedience and ingratitude. The history of all these successive oppressions and deliverances thus exemplifies and confirms the representation of the whole period which is given in the introduction.‡ Temporibus . . . iudicium, sicut se habebant et peccata populi et misericordia Dei, alternaverunt prospera et adversa bellorum.§

* The references to the grandsons of Moses (18<sup>30</sup>) and of Aaron (20<sup>28</sup>) show that, in the view of the writer at least, these events took place at the beginning of this period, within a generation after the invasion, not at its end.

† See below, § 5, 6.

It is clear that in all this the author's purpose is not merely to interpret the history, and explain upon religious principles why such evils befell Israel in the days of the judges, but to impress upon his readers the lesson that unfaithfulness to Yahweh is always punished; that whenever Israel falls away from him, he withdraws his protection and leaves it defenceless before its foes. By historical examples he would warn his contemporaries against a like apostasy. His motive and aim are thus not historical, but religious.¶ In a different, but not less effective way, he inculcates the same truth which all the prophets preached; Yahweh is Israel's God, and the religion of Israel is to keep itself to him alone.¶¶

The author's motive, the lesson he enforces, and the way in which he makes the history teach it, are almost the only data at our command to ascertain the age in which he lived. Indefinite as such criteria may seem, they are, when the character of the work is sufficiently marked, among the most conclusive; and in this case they enable us to determine, beyond reasonable doubt, the period and circle in which the book was written.

That the history of Israel is a divine discipline, righteous, wise, and good, is the great idea of the prophets. In old Israel, as among other nations, defeat in battle, foreign invasion and conquest, were indeed ascribed to the anger of the national god, whom his people, or members of it, had in some way offended. But that Yahweh's anger as well as his favour is moral, and that, therefore his dealing with his people is to be understood upon moral premises, was first distinctly taught by the prophets of the 8th century. This principle was naturally applied by them in the first place to the present and the immediate future. But the evils of the present have their roots in the past; and Hosea, looking back over the history of Israel from the time of the settlement in Canaan, sees in it one long, dark chapter of defection from Yahweh, of heathenish worship and heathenish wickedness. It is Hosea, also, who represents unfaithfulness to Yahweh as the one great sin from which all others spring, and who, with a figure drawn from his own unhappy home, brands this unfaithfulness with the name 'prostitution,' by which later writers so often characterize it.*

The prophets of the end of the 7th and the beginning of the 6th century judge Judah in the same way in which Hosea, in the last years of the Northern Kingdom, had judged Israel. In the long reign of Manasseh, foreign gods and foreign cults were introduced in Judah on a scale never before witnessed; the principle of exclusiveness which was native in the religion of Yahweh, and which the prophets had proclaimed with ever increasing absoluteness, was recklessly trampled under foot. This was, as Jeremiah constantly declared, the unpardonable sin which nothing short of the destruction of the nation could expiate.† Ezekiel represents the exile as the punishment of the sins of Israel in its whole past: in Egypt, in the wilderness, in Canaan, it had always been a rebellious people, ever falling away from Yahweh into heathenism and idolatry.*

The signal fulfilment of the prophets' predictions in the fall of Judah, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the deportation of its inhabitants, set the seal of God's truth not only on their religious teaching, but upon their judgement of the past of Israel. In the light of this judgement, disciples of the prophets wrote the history of the two kingdoms, using and adapting the old records to illustrate and enforce the great lessons which prophecy had taught. The same ruling ideas, the same practical motives, permeate the Book of Deuteronomy, especially the opening and closing chapters,† and are indeed so prominent in it that the historical pragmatism of which we have been speaking is frequently, and not inappropriately, called Deuteronomic, and the writers whose work it characterizes, the Deuteronomic school.

To this school the author of Jud. 2<sup>d</sup>-16th manifestly belongs. What others had done for the history of the Kingdom, he does for the centuries between the invasion and the days of Samuel. ‡ From the very first generation after the settlement in Canaan, Israel had left Yahweh, to run after other gods and prostitute itself to them; and in this course it persisted through the whole period, in spite of all warnings and chastisements. The part of the book which we are now considering can, therefore, hardly have been written before the beginning of the 6th century.§

Other considerations might incline us to put it some decades later. It is antecedently probable that the new school of historians applied themselves first to the history of the Kingdom, where the prophets had gone before them, and in which the moral was more impressive because nearer at hand. From that they would naturally go back to the earlier period. The same inference may perhaps be drawn from the fact that the judgement of Israel's past in our book is more severe than in the Kings. In the latter, the sin of the people is in no small part the worship on the high places, a heathenish form of worship, forbidden by the law, but still a worship of Yahweh. In Judges the apostasy is complete; the people abandons Yahweh for the Baals and Astartes.*

The conclusions to which an examination of the contents of the book leads are confirmed by the evidence of its vocabulary and style, in which the affinity to the literature of the end of the 7th century is unmistakable. In the commentary these parallels are noted, and they need not be repeated here.†

§ 4. The Sources of Judges ii. 6-xvi. 31.

The characteristics which have been discussed in the last section appear chiefly in the introduction (2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>6</sup>) and at the beginning of the histories of the several judges. The stories themselves, with the exception of that of Othniel (3<sup>7-11</sup>), show few traces of the author's distinctive conceptions or expressions.‡ Some of them—for instance, Samson's adventures among the Philistines—have little or no relation to the purpose of the book; others relate of the judges things which must have been offensive to the author, such as Gideon's setting up the ephōd and the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter; in all, the religious ideas, the language, and style, are entirely unlike his own.§ It is plain therefore, that the author of Jud. 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> did not write these stories himself, but took them from older sources.

These sources cannot have been oral tradition, or unwritten popular legends, || for, apart from the difficulty of supposing that oral tradition had transmitted to so late a time such lifelike and truthful pictures of a state of society that had passed away cen-

* See Stade, GVJ. ii. p. 21. It is to be observed, however, that in the theory of the Deuteronomic writers, the local cults on the high places were not prohibited till after the building of the temple.

‡ Kitt. thinks it very probable that the author of 3<sup>7-11</sup> also wrote 6<sup>25-32</sup> 7<sup>2-8</sup> 8<sup>22f.</sup>; but these passages appear to me to be derived from one of the chief sources of the book.

§ Compare the story of Ehud (3<sup>12-30</sup>) with that of Othniel (3<sup>7-11</sup>). The latter shows us, better than anything else, what these histories would be like if the author had written them himself. We may also compare the chapters of ancient history with which the author of Chronicles supplements Kings,—all, of course, in his own peculiar manner.

turies before, in reducing oral tradition to writing, the author would inevitably have left the impress of his own style upon the stories far more deeply than is the case; the Deuteronomic peculiarities we have noted above would not be confined to the beginning and end of the tales. The greater or less unevenness of which we are always aware in passing from the introduction to the story which follows, is clearly the joint by which an older written source is united to the Deuteronomic preface.

If the author employed written sources, our next inquiry is, whether he made his choice among single tales or different collections of tales, or whether he took them all from some one older book. This question cannot be answered with entire certainty; it is quite conceivable that the cycle of stories about Samson, for instance, may have existed separately; but it is demonstrable, I think, that the author had before him an older work in which the exploits of a considerable number of the Israelite heroes were narrated;* and if this is true, it may very well be that this collection was his only source. It is easier to understand how a story like that of Samson should have been included in the Deuteronomic Book of Judges, if the author found it in the earlier work on which he based his own, than to imagine that he introduced it for himself from some other source.

A more minute examination of the introduction to the book ( $2^6-3^6$ ), and of the setting of the several stories, especially those of Gideon ( $6^{1-10}$ ) and Jephthah ( $10^6-16^6$ ), brings out the fact that these parts of the work are not entirely homogeneous. The numerous repetitions and duplications, and the differences in point of view and phraseology, which, though slight, are unmistakable, show that more than one writer has had a hand in the composition.† Of this fact, which is recognized by most recent critics, two explanations may be given. One is, that the author or editor of the present Book of Judges, in incorporating  $2^6-16^{31}$  in his own work, dwelt upon and emphasized the moral lessons of the history which his predecessor had enforced; the lack of unity and consistency which the critics have observed would thus be due to interpolation.* The alternative hypothesis is, that the author of 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> used as the basis of his work an older collection of tales of the Israelite heroes, in which the varying fortunes of Israel in those troublous times were already made to point the moral that unfaithfulness to Yahweh was the prime cause of all the evils that befell the people,—a pre-Deuteronomic Book of the Histories of the Judges.†

† See the commentary on the passages indicated, and esp. p. 63 f., 175 f., 181 f., 275 f.

The considerations which incline the balance of probability to the second of these hypotheses are the following: (a) The elements which are admitted by all not to belong to the principal Deuteronomic stratum in the book do not seem to be superimposed upon it, but embedded in it; and they are more intimately united with their context than the additions by which later editors often try to heighten the effect of their text are wont to be. (b) If the author or editor of the present Book of Judges made all these additions in 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup>, we should expect to find his mark upon ch. 17, 18, 19-21 also, which certainly invited a moral comment and application quite as much as some of the stories in the body of the work; but no trace of such an improvement is to be discovered in those chapters. (c) The language of the parts of the book in question is distinguished from that of the Deuteronomic writers and editors generally by a more marked affinity to one of the older sources of the Hexateuch (E).‡ (d) Some of the tales, e.g. that of Gideon (ch. 6-8), are composite; two somewhat different versions of the story have been united by a third hand, which does not appear to be that of the author of the book, but of an earlier redactor. It is not a remote conjecture that this redactor is also the author of the non-Deuteronomic element in the introduction (2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>6</sup>) and other parts of the book. (e) The Deuteronomic Book of Judges did not include ch. 17, 18, 19-21; the closing formula, 15<sup>20</sup>, may perhaps be taken as evidence that it did not contain ch. 16; § 8<sup>33-35</sup> is an editorial substitute for

ch. 9, which has obviously not passed through the hands of the Deuteronomic author.* But ch. 17, 18, and the primary version of the story in ch. 19-21 are akin to the older narratives in 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup>; ch. 16, the death of Samson, is unquestionably from the same source as ch. 13-15; ch. 9, itself composite, is too closely connected with ch. 6-8 to be of different origin. The simplest hypothesis is, that these chapters were contained in the earlier collection, but were omitted by the Deuteronomic author from his book, as unsuitable to his purpose.†

The older book seems to have contained the histories of Ehud, Deborah and Barak, Gideon, Abimelech, Jephthah, and Samson; ‡ not improbably also the story of Micah's idols and the migration of the Danites, and the original form of that of the Levite and his concubine. In what order these stories stood, we cannot make out. Chapters 17, 18, and 19-21, if included in the book, would have their natural place near its beginning; they certainly cannot have stood where they now do, in the midst of the history of the "days of the Philistines," between Samson and Eli. Chapter 10<sup>6-16</sup>, a formal and extended introduction resembling 2<sup>6-21</sup>, can hardly have been designed to occupy its present position.§

It is a question of more importance whether the pre-Deuteronomic Judges (to use this name for brevity) || contained other histories not included in the canonical Book of Judges.

The death of Samson (16<sup>31</sup>) is not the end of a period or a turning point in the history, such as an author would naturally choose for the end of a book; nor is it at all probable that a writer who begins with an introduction of some length, setting forth in advance the moral of the history, would bring his work to so abrupt a conclusion without a word of retrospective comment. It has long been noticed that in 1 Sam. the account of the death of Eli (4<sup>18</sup>) is followed by the words, "Now he had judged Israel forty years"; precisely the same formula as in Jud. 16<sup>31</sup>, cf. 12<sup>7</sup> 10<sup>2,3</sup> 12<sup>9,11,14</sup>.* Of Samuel also we read that "he judged Israel as long as he lived" (1 S. 7<sup>15</sup>); and that the words were not originally meant in a justiciary sense, as might seem from v. 16, 17, which describe his judicial circuit,† is manifest from the preceding verses, which tell how he delivered Israel from the Philistines by the great victory at Mizpah, concluding in the same way as the accounts of the deliverances wrought by the judges before him: "And the Philistines were subdued, and did not again come into the territory of Israel; ‡ and the hand of Yahweh was against the Philistines as long as Samuel lived" (7<sup>13</sup>).§ Samuel was thus, in this narrative, the judge who delivered Israel from the Philistines.|| In 1 S. 12 also, Samuel is represented, not merely as a prophet or as a justice, but as one who for many years had borne rule over Israel. This speech of Samuel, which contains a retrospect of the period of the judges (v. 7-11), and solemn words of warning for the future under the newly established kingdom, is precisely the conclusion which we desire for the Book of the Histories of the Judges, corresponding admirably to the parting discourse of Joshua (Jos. 24) at the close of the period of the conquest.¶ There is, therefore, great probability in the opinion of Graf and others that the pre-Deuteronomic Judges included the times of Eli and Samuel, and ended with 1 S. 12.** If this be true, Jud. 10<sup>6-16</sup> †† may originally have been the introduction to the period of Philistine oppression in the same work.‡‡ These wars were, in fact, and in the historical traditions of Israel, the beginning of a new epoch; and the author may have recognized their importance by a more extended introduction than those which he prefixed to the other "oppressions."

The pragmatism of this work was similar to that of the Deuteronomic Judges; in it also, as may be seen in the non-Deuteronomic parts of 2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>6</sup>, and 10<sup>6</sup>-16, in 6<sup>7</sup>-10 and in 1 S. 12, the history is interpreted and judged from the prophetic point of view; that the people forsook Yahweh and worshipped the gods of Canaan is here also the fons et origo malorum; in it the conflicts of particular tribes and groups of tribes with their neighbours had already become oppressions and deliverances of all Israel, the heroes of these local struggles, the judges of Israel.* But, close as the resemblance is, the distinctive Deuteronomic note is absent; the standpoint is that of Hosea and the prophetic historians who wrote in his spirit, rather than that of Jeremiah and the Deuteronomic school.

The age of this older Book of Judges is fixed within these limits; it may with considerable confidence be ascribed to the 7th century, perhaps to the times of Manasseh.

The hand of the author of the older Judges, like that of the Deuteronomic writer, is recognized in the introduction and the setting of the tales rather than in the tales themselves. The question from what sources the latter are derived is only pushed back one step by the discovery of a pre-Deuteronomic collection. The existence of composite narratives, like the histories of Gideon (ch. 6-8), and Deborah and Barak (ch. 4), shows that there must have been more than one such source. The more or less strongly marked diversity in language and style between the several stories also points to diversity of origin. That these sources were old and good collections of the national traditions, the character of the stories sufficiently attests. On closer inspection, one of them appears to be more ancient and of greater historical worth than the rest. In some instances, as for example in that of Samson (ch. 13-16), the author seems to have known but one version of the story, which he has given entire from one of his sources; in other cases, as in that of Gideon-Jerubbaal, he united as best he could two somewhat discrepant accounts; in still other cases it is difficult to decide whether the lack of unity and directness in the narrative is to be ascribed to the attempt to combine different versions, or to editorial amplification, or to subsequent interpolations and glosses.

These phenomena are so much like those with which we are familiar in parts of the Hexateuch where the Yahwistic and Elohist narratives (J and E) have been united by a later writer (Rje) into one composite history, that we can hardly fail to ask the question whether the similarity is not really identity; that is, whether the pre-Deuteronomic Judges was not a part of the great prophetic history which critics designate by the symbol JE, and its sources J and E. That this is the case was affirmed by Schrader, who attempted to separate the two chief sources from each other and from the Deuteronomic elements.* More recently Böhme † and Stade ‡ have demonstrated the affinity of parts of the book to J and E respectively; while Budde has taken up the problem which Schrader first attacked, and with great acuteness has worked out an analysis of the entire book. § On the other hand, Kuenen maintains a sceptical attitude toward all attempts to identify the sources of Judges with J and E in the Hexateuch, || and Kittel combats the hypothesis, arguing that such resemblances as exist are less decisive than the countervailing differences. ¶

Budde's hypothesis is not intrinsically improbable. There is the best reason to believe that neither J nor E ended with the conquest of Canaan, but that both brought the history down to a much later time, if not to their own day. The parting speech of Joshua, Jos. 24 (substantially E), looks not only backward but forward; it is the end of a book, not of the historical work of which it formed a part; and Jud. 2<sup>6-10</sup> (Jos. 24<sup>28-31</sup>), from the same hand, is unmistakably the transition to the subsequent history.

Jud. 1, J's account of the conquest and settlement of Canaan, is certainly not the end of his work; 2<sup>1a. 5b</sup> here also lead over to the following period.* It is antecedently more probable that these books furnished the author of Judges with his material than that they altogether disappear at the beginning of this period, their place being taken by two unrelated sources having a certain resemblance to J and E respectively.† It must be acknowledged that the resemblances are less marked than might be expected, and are accompanied by noticeable differences. But it should be observed, first, that the ultimate sources, the popular traditions from which the tales of the judges are drawn, naturally had a different origin and character from the legends of the patriarchs in Genesis or the narratives of the Mosaic age; and, second, that the symbols J and E represent, not individual authors, but a succession of writers, the historiography of a certain period and school.‡ The differences upon which Kittel and König have laid stress are, it appears to me, critically of less significance than the admitted resemblances. Moreover, the problem of the sources in Judges cannot be separated from the same question in Samuel, and in the latter the indicia point to J and E more clearly, perhaps, than in Judges. §

For these reasons I have used the symbols J and E in the commentary, to distinguish the two chief sources from which the narratives appear to be derived, though I am fully aware that the question of their identity is by no means beyond controversy. Those of my readers who are not convinced of this identity may regard the letters J and E as equivalent to X and Y, two otherwise unknown sources, of which X (J) is almost everywhere manifestly the older and historically the more valuable. The author who united them and composed the pre-Deuteronomic Book of Judges was probably one of that school of prophetic historians

* Cf. also J's part in 2<sup>23-36</sup>.

† It is methodologically an unreasonable demand that it should first be proved that J and E included the history of the times of the judges, before we endeavour to identify them in the Book of Judges. What other proof can we have than that we can trace them in its narratives?

‡ In E, for example, there is a well-defined secondary stratum (E<sub>2</sub>).

§ We have seen reason to believe that a considerable part of 1 Sam. was contained in the pre-Deuteronomic Judges.

who are commonly represented by the signature Rje.* His hand may be most distinctly recognized in 2<sup>30</sup>-3<sup>8</sup>, where the conflicting representations of J and E are worked into one another with free additions by the redactor in a way with which we are familiar in JE in the Hexateuch.

The age of the two chief sources in Judges 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> cannot be very definitely fixed. There are, in this part of the book, no allusions to historical events of later times which might serve us as a clew.† Almost the only criterion which we possess is their relation to the religious development. In those parts of the book which are attributed to J, the standpoint of the narrator is that of the old national religion of Israel; there is no trace of prophetic influence, and we can have no hesitation in ascribing this source to a time before the great prophetic movement of the 8th century. Other indications point to a considerably higher antiquity. The stories are manifestly drawn from a living tradition, not from antiquarian lore; they reproduce the state of society and religion in the early days of the settlement in Palestine with a convincing reality which is of nature, not of art, and exhibit a knowledge of the conditions of the time which can hardly have been possessed by an author of the 8th century, after the changes which two centuries of the kingdom and of rapidly advancing civilization had wrought. On such grounds we should be inclined to assign this source to the first half of the 9th century, a date which is entirely compatible with our identification of it with J. ‡

The second main source from which the tales of the Judges are derived (E) appears, wherever direct comparison is possible, as in the histories of Gideon and Abimelech, to be younger than J. It is, however, not all of the same age. The older stratum does not differ very greatly from J, and is also, in all probability, pre-prophetic; the later stratum is strongly tinged with prophetic ideas, and in its judgement of the religious offences of the people prepares the way for the pragmatism of the Jehovistic (JE) and Deuteronomic History of the Judges. So closely, indeed, does this element ( $E_2$ ) approach the standpoint of the latter authors that it is difficult, if not impossible, to decide whether certain passages or verses should be attributed to the one or the other.* Fortunately, the similarity which makes the analysis uncertain makes it also of less importance. The author of the later element in  $E$  ( $E_2$ ) may have lived toward the end of the 8th century or in the first half of the 7th.†

* This symbol is, however, not very satisfactory, since the method of these writers was much more that of the historian who largely excepts his sources, than of the redactor who merely combines and harmonizes them.

The Triumphal Ode, ch. 5, is much older than the corresponding prose narrative, or than any other of the stories in the book.‡ Whether it was included in  $J$ , or in  $E$ , or in both of them, cannot be certainly determined. The closing formula, 5<sup>31b</sup>, may have been added or transposed by an editor. The Ode was in all probability preserved in one of the collections of old Hebrew poetry, such as the Book of Jashar, or the Book of the Wars of Yahweh; § but, like other poems from those collections, may early have been incorporated into the prose histories.

The brief notices of the so-called Minor Judges (10<sup>1-5</sup> 12<sup>8-15</sup>) begin and close with formulas which, while they have a certain likeness to those which introduce and conclude the stories of the other judges, have also a distinctive difference. || Of each of the five we read that he "judged Israel" so many years, but of the oppressions and deliverances which in the rest of the book alternate with such regularity nothing is said; of their exploits there is no record; indeed, beyond the places where they were buried and perhaps the number of their posterity, nothing whatever is narrated of them. Most, if not all, the names of these "judges" appear to be those of clans rather than individuals; and the years of their rule seem to be independent of the chronological scheme of the book and to disturb its symmetry. It has been conjectured that the names were introduced by an editor to make up the number of twelve judges; ¶ and Wellhausen has strengthened this hypothesis by the observation that the sum of the years of the ¶ Nöldeke and many recent scholars.

Minor-Judges is almost exactly that of the interregna in the general chronology of the period.* The mention of these judges should then be compared with similar antiquarian and genealogical notices in Chronicles. On the other hand, Kuenen, remarking that the characteristic formulas of the Minor Judges stand also at the close of the story of Jephthah (12<sup>7</sup>, cf. also 15<sup>20</sup> 1 S. 4<sup>18</sup> 7<sup>15</sup>), and rejecting, partly on this ground, Wellhausen's combination of the numbers, is of the opinion that these five judges were included not only in the Deuteronomic Judges, but in its predecessor, and are thus ultimately derived from one of the sources of the latter work.† A third hypothesis is that the Minor Judges stood in the pre-Deuteronomic book, were omitted by the Deuteronomic author, like the story of Abimelech and perhaps ch. 17-21, and restored by the editor of the present Book of Judges. Beyond such conjectures we can hardly go.

§ 5. The Sources of Judges xvii.-xxi. and of i.-ii. 5.

The two stories with which our Book of Judges ends, that of Micah's idols and the migration of the Danites (ch. 17, 18), and that of the assault on the Levite and his concubine at Gibeah, with its disastrous consequences to the tribe of Benjamin (ch. 19-21), were not included in the Deuteronomic Judges. They relate, not the deliverance of Israel from the foes that oppressed it, by the hand of divinely commissioned champions, but the fortunes of two tribes, one of which was compelled to leave its earliest seats to find a new home in the remote north, while the second was almost exterminated by the righteous indignation of the other Israelites. If the Deuteronomic author had employed these stories, as perhaps he might have done, to illustrate the moral and religious corruption of the times, the natural place for them in his book would have been immediately after the introduction ; a place which chronological considerations also indicated. There is no evidence, however, in the introductions to these stories, of any intention to use them in this way. The familiar formulas of D are absent, nor is their place taken by others which might be attributed to the same hand. In the narratives themselves there is no trace of a Deuteronomic redaction.

* See below, § 7. This theory is adopted by Budde, who thinks that the shorter formulas in which the names of the Minor Judges are set are patterned after those of the Deuteronomic author (Richt. u. Sam., p. 93 f.); cf. also Cornill, Einl<sup>2</sup>, p. 97 ff.

† HCO<sup>2</sup>, i. p. 351 f.; cf. p. 342, 354. A similar view is maintained by Kittel, GdH, i. 2. p. 10 ff., except that, in conformity with his general theory, which recognizes no pre-Deuteronomic editor, he supposes that the smaller Book of Judges (ri.) was one of the immediate sources of D.

Whether these stories were contained in the older work which the Deuteronomic author used as the basis of his own, we cannot be so sure. There is certainly no mark of the editor's hand upon them, and it is conceivable that they were preserved independently in one of the sources of that collection. This would account both for the resemblance of the stories to those in 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> and for the absence of all traces either of Rje or of D in them.* But in ch. 17, 18, two narratives appear to have been combined in much the same way as in ch. 6-8, and we should be inclined to attribute this fusion to the same redactor (Rje).† It is quite possible that, as this author's work was considerably more extensive than the Deuteronomic Judges, he may have found place in it for these chapters.

That the two versions of the story of Micah and the Danites (ch. 17, 18) are derived from J and E is a natural conjecture. Budde has noted several words and phrases in one of them which seem to point to E. The whole impression which this strand of the narrative makes would incline me rather to ascribe it to J ; decisive evidence is lacking. However that may be, there can be no doubt that the primary version of the story is among the oldest in the book, as it is in many ways one of the most instructive. The second version is apparently younger, but, if I interpret it correctly, there seems to be no reason why it may not come from E.‡ In 18<sup>30-31</sup> are two references to historical events : the depopulation of the land (v.<sup>30</sup>), and the cessation of the temple at Shiloh (v.<sup>31</sup>). By the former we are probably to understand the depor-

* That J, at least, survived separately till a late date is probably to be inferred from the preservation of ch. 1.

† Many critics, however, think that the appearance of duplication is due to interpolations, rather than to the union of two sources ; see p. 366-369. Ch. 19 is also perhaps composite.

‡ See p. 370.

tation of the inhabitants of northern Galilee in 734; the date of the latter is unknown. The older narrative in ch. 17, 18, to which 18<sup>30</sup> seems to belong, can scarcely be brought down to as late a time as the reign of Tiglathpileser; the words may have been added by an editor.*

The problem which is presented to criticism by the narrative of the outrage at Gibeah and the sanguinary vengeance which almost annihilated the tribe of Benjamin is of a different kind from any other in the Book of Judges. At first sight, the narrative seems to be not only entirely unhistorical, but without even a legendary ground — one huge theocratic fiction of very late origin.† Closer examination, however, shows that this is a mistake. The basis of the narrative, which can be discovered not only in ch. 19 and 21<sup>15ff.</sup>, but in ch. 20, is a very old story, having an obvious affinity to the primary stratum in ch. 17, 18, and in tone and language resembling the most ancient parts of the Hexateuch and the Books of Samuel. This is overlaid, especially in ch. 20, 21<sup>1-14</sup>, by a stratum akin to the latest additions to the priestly history in the Hexateuch and to the Chronicles. This post-exilic rifacimento is clearly dependent upon the former version; the only question is, whether it once existed separately and was united with the old story by a third hand,‡ or whether it was from the beginning merely a kind of midrash upon the original text, in part exaggerating it, in part substituting an account of the events in accordance with the author's theocratic conception of the ancient history.§ The latter appears to me the more probable hypothesis; but the other is certainly possible. || The primitive story is hardly inferior in age to any in the book, and may be derived from J. The secondary version bears, in conception and expression, all the marks of the extreme decadence of Hebrew literature, and is a product of the 4th century B.C. more probably than of the 5th. If it was interpolated by its author in the earlier narrative, as we find it, it may be the work of the editor who appended chapters 17-21 to the Deuteronomic Judges; on the alternative hypothesis, the same editor may have combined the two versions; but other explanations are also conceivable.

The Book of Ruth relates things which happened "in the days when the judges ruled"; in the Greek Bible it immediately follows Judges, and in many early enumerations and catalogues is counted as a part of Judges.* Some recent scholars have thought that this was the original place of the book: it was, like ch. 17, 18, and 19-21, an appendix to the Book of Judges proper, ch. 1-16.† Ruth is, however, in subject, language, and style, unlike any of the stories in Jud. 1-16, or in 17-21; it is a product of a much later age, and belongs to a wholly different species of literature. As the events narrated in it are supposed to have taken place some half century before the establishment of the kingdom, its natural place in the series of historical books was between Judges and Samuel; or, as falling in the days of the judges, it might be appended to the former book; but this connexion was probably never universal, and may, indeed, have been peculiar to the Greek Bible.

Chapter 1<sup>1-2</sup><sup>5</sup> contains an account of the invasion of Western Palestine by the Israelite tribes, and their settlements, particularly enumerating the cities that they did not succeed in conquering, most of which long remained in the possession of the native Canaanite population.‡ This account, which in historical value far surpasses any other source that we possess for this period, is manifestly extracted from an older work, and Schrader, Meyer, and others rightly recognize in it J.'s history of the conquest.§ The narrative has been considerably abridged by the editor who prefixed it to the pre-Deuteronomic Book of Judges,|| for the purpose, as we see from his own words in 2<sup>1b-5a</sup>, of showing how Israel sinned in making terms with the people of the land and leaving them to be a constant snare and peril; it has also suffered to some extent from derangement and interpolation, whether by the editor's own hand or that of scribes. Fortunately, the motive of the recension gives us confidence that he left intact those features of his original which are of chief interest and importance for us, proving that in the invasion the tribes acted singly, or as they were allied by older ties or common interest; and that Israelite supremacy in Canaan was not achieved by one irresistible wave of conquest, but only after an obstinate struggle lasting for generations. Fragments of the same source, some of which are a welcome supplement to the narrative in Judges 1, are preserved in the Book of Joshua.*

§ 6. The Composition of the Book of Judges.

If the results of the critical analysis outlined in § 4 and 5 are substantially correct, the genesis of the book may be conceived in some such way as the following: †

Early in the 9th century, the traditions of the invasion and settlement of Western Palestine, of the subsequent conflicts in various parts of the land with the native population or with new invaders, and of the heroic deeds of Israel's leaders and champions in these struggles, were collected and fixed in writing, probably as part of a historical work which included the patriarchal age, the migration from Egypt, and the history of Israel under the kingdom down to the author's own time (J).

Perhaps a century later, another book of similar character and scope was written, containing in part the same stories, but in a form adhering less closely to historical reality (E). A second recension of this work (E<sub>2</sub>) bears very distinctly the impress of the prophetic movement of the 8th century, and specifically of Hosea's teaching, and may be assigned to the end of the 8th or the beginning of the 7th century. The author's religious

* See p. 5 f.

† It must be borne in mind that any hypothesis we may frame is much simpler than the literary history of which it attempts to give account. J, E, JE, D, R, &c. represent, not individual authors whose share in the work can be exactly assigned by the analysis, but stages of the process, in which more than one—perhaps many—successive hands participated, every transcription being to some extent a recension.

interpretation and judgement of the history in the spirit of prophecy is the beginning of the treatment so generally adopted by later writers ; history with a moral soon becoming history for the moral.

As in the Hexateuch and in Samuel, J and E (E<sub>2</sub>) were the chief sources of the great prophetic historical work, JE. Where the author of this work found in his sources variants of the same story, he combined them, sometimes interweaving them so closely as to make the strands almost inextricable, sometimes doing little more than transcribe paragraphs of J and E alternately ; adapting his method to the material before him. In many cases he found it necessary, in order to bring his sources into harmony or to preserve the connexion, to insert something of his own ; in some places he added with a freer hand. The Book of Judges in JE* seems to have begun with the death of Joshua, and to have closed with the great discourse of Samuel, 1 S. 12, a division which certainly existed in E. It probably contained all the stories in our Judges except that of Othniel ; and in view of the character of the succeeding redactions, Rje may, with greater justice than D, be regarded as the true author of the book. JE is a work of the 7th century, but antedates the reforms of Josiah (621 B.C.) and the dominant influence of Jeremiah and the Deuteronomy.

Early in the 6th century, an author belonging to the Deuteronomic school took this work as the basis of his own. As the traces of his hand do not extend to 1 S. 1-12 † nor to Jud. 1<sup>1</sup>-2<sup>5</sup> 17-21, we infer that D's book included only Jud. 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> (or perhaps 15<sup>20</sup>). Eli and Samuel not unnaturally presented themselves to his mind in the character of priest and prophet rather than of judges ; and, if historical considerations weighed with him, he may very well have thought that the life of Samuel, from which that of Eli is inseparable, belonged to the history of the founding of the kingdom, rather than to the preceding period. Besides Jud. 17-21, it is certain that D excluded the story of Abimelech, which did not readily lend itself to his moral purpose ; 8<sup>33-35</sup> is his brief substitute for the omitted narrative. He may also have

* It is not of course implied that its author gave it this title.

† The Deuteronomic elements in 1 S. 1-12 have not the distinctive signature of D in Judges.

omitted the Minor Judges,* possibly also ch. 16, the tragic end of Samson; this would account for the premature closing formula, 15<sup>20</sup>.† On the other hand, he added the deliverance of Israel from Cushan-rishathaim by Othniel (3<sup>7-11</sup>), as a typical exemplification of the theory set forth in the introduction (2<sup>6-3</sup>), and perhaps with the additional motive of giving a judge to Judah, which in the older book was almost the only tribe that furnished none. The system of chronology is Deuteronomic, as appears from its relation to the system of the Books of Kings, but whether in its present form it is the work of D is less certain; see § 7.

Upon the general introduction, 2<sup>6-3</sup>, as well as upon the introductions to the stories of the several judges, D impressed the unmistakable Deuteronomic stamp. In his judgement of the history he had been anticipated by E<sub>2</sub> and JE, but his more rigorous pragmatism and his distinctive style can in most cases be distinguished with sufficient certainty from the work of his predecessors. In 2<sup>6-3</sup>, especially in 2<sup>6-10</sup>, the Deuteronomic element is very closely combined with the older text. Budde, whose opinion I have followed in the commentary, ‡ thinks that D did not, in this somewhat awkward way, intrude his own point of view into the introduction of JE, but substituted a new introduction for JE's; the two were united, to their mutual detriment, by the final, post-exilic redactor. The other hypothesis has, however, the advantage of simplicity, and the considerations which weigh against it are perhaps overestimated. §

The Deuteronomic Judges did not supplant the older work upon which it was founded; JE's history was in existence long after the exile. In the 5th or 4th century B.C., an editor united the two books, and produced the present Book of Judges. In doing so, he naturally included those parts of JE which D had omitted, Jud. 1<sup>1-2</sup> 9 17 18 19-21; possibly also the Minor Judges, 10<sup>1-5</sup> 12<sup>8-15</sup>. || The secondary version of the war with Benjamin in ch. 19-21 is perhaps his work; and in other parts of the book traces of his hand may be discerned in minor glosses; some of these may, however, be of still later date.

* This depends in part upon the decision of the difficult questions of the chronology; see § 7. † Budde. ‡ P. 63 f.

The theory of the origin of the Book of Judges set forth in the preceding paragraphs is in all essential features that of Budde, whose thorough investigation of the critical problems of the book has been of the greatest value to me throughout. The reader of the commentary will, I trust, discover that I have not accepted Budde's results without a careful re-examination of the whole question; and in many particulars I have been led to form a different opinion. Of other hypotheses concerning the composition of the book, it will be sufficient to mention those of Kuenen and Kittel. The former thinks that Jud. 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> is a part of a Deuteronomiac Book of Judges the end of which is contained in 1 S. 7-12. This book contained all the stories that are now found in the chapters named,* with the solitary exception of 3<sup>31</sup> (Shamgar). The introduction, 2<sup>6</sup>-3<sup>6</sup>, is, as a whole, the work of the Deuteronomiac writer,† who is the author of the religious pragmatism of the book. He used as the basis of his work a pre-Deuteronomiac Book of Judges, in which Othniel as well as Shamgar was not included, while Abimelech was reckoned as one of the twelve judges, whose number was completed by Samuel, or, more probably, by some name which we cannot now recover. This older book was quite different in character from the Deuteronomiac work; it knew nothing of a regular alternation of apostasy, punishment, and deliverance; it was a series of portraits of the leaders and heroes of Israel in the period before the establishment of the kingdom; but the unity of Israel was already erroneously antedated, and its deliverance from the hand of its foes represented as Yahweh's answer to its prayer. The author drew a large part of his material from older writings, some of them of Ephraimite origin, which were among the earliest products of Israelite historiography; but the book itself can hardly have been compiled before the first half of the 7th century. Jud. 1<sup>1</sup>-2<sup>5</sup> preserves fragments of a very ancient account of the conquest of Canaan by the Israelite tribes; ch. 17, 18, is also a very old story, which has been considerably interpolated; in ch. 19-21 the old narrative has been thoroughly worked over in the spirit of post-exilic Judaism. These chapters were united with 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>31</sup> by the last

* Including the Minor Judges.

† It has suffered somewhat from interpolations; and in 3<sup>1-3</sup> the author has incorporated an older fragment which is not altogether in harmony with his own view.

redactor.* Kittel differs from almost all recent critics in denying the existence of a pre-Deuteronomic Book of Judges. The author of the Deuteronomic Judges ("Ri") collected the stories in 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>81</sup>, combined parallel narratives (as in ch. 6-8), and embraced them all in his rigorous pragmatism and his schematic chronology. The traces of a different conception and style, which have been taken as evidence that this author worked upon the basis of an older book, are rather to be ascribed to the redactor of the present Book of Judges (R), who introduced a considerable number of glosses and some longer additions to the text of "Ri."† This last redactor, who also joined 1<sup>1</sup>-2<sup>5</sup> 17-21 to 2<sup>6</sup>-16<sup>81</sup>, himself belonged to the Deuteronomic school; but his style, formed on older models, is a degree nearer to that of E in the Hexateuch than that of "Ri." Kittel's theory thus gives us, instead of JE and D, a double Deuteronomic redaction which we might represent by D and Rd. The sources of the tales are not J and E, but unknown ancient collections.

§ 7. Chronology of the Book of Judges.

The chronology of the Book of Judges presents a very difficult problem, on which a great deal of learning and ingenuity has been expended, without, as yet, leading to any generally accepted solution. The data contained in the book itself are these :

The first thing that will be noticed in this table is the frequency with which the numbers forty (No. 2. 6. 8. 17), eighty (No. 4), and twenty (No. 5. 18) recur in it.† Each of the greater judges, except Jephthah, secures his country from the attacks of its foes for forty, or twice forty, or half of forty, years. This phenomenon becomes still more striking when we observe that it is not confined to the Book of Judges, but runs through the chronology of the whole period: The wandering in the wilderness lasted forty years; Eli judged Israel forty years (1 S. 4<sup>18</sup>); ‡ David reigned forty years (1 K. 2<sup>11</sup>); Solomon forty (1 K. 11<sup>42</sup>). In 1 K. 6<sup>1</sup>, finally, we read, that from the exodus until Solomon began to build the temple, in the fourth year of his reign, was four hundred and eighty years.§ It is obvious that we have here to do with a systematic chronology, in which a generation is reckoned at forty years, and the period made to consist of twelve generations. ||

When we compare the numbers given in Judges with the total

* Fl. Jos., ant. v. 7, 15, names Abdon, but does not give the years of his rule.

§ § 440 (ΣL 'AΣ 480), for some reason reckoning eleven generations instead of twelve. See Preuss, Die Zeitrechnung der Septuaginta, 1859, p. 74 ff.

|| So Hecataeus of Miletus attempted to construct a chronology of Greek antiquity on the basis of the genealogies, reckoning forty years to a generation; see E. Meyer, Forschungen, i. p. 169 ff.; GdA. ii. p. 8 f. The second great period of Hebrew history, from Solomon to the return from Babylon, is also four hundred and eighty years; see Wellhausen, Prol<sup>3</sup>, p. 283 ff.; Stade, GVF. i. p. 89 ff. In conformity with this theory, 1 Chr. 6<sup>3</sup> ff. gives in the first period the names of twelve high priests; in the second, according to the corrected text (see §), from the first high priest who officiated in the new temple to Jehozadak, who was carried away to Babylon, eleven. The four hundred and ninety years which Daniel computes for the last period, to the coming of the kingdom of the saints, is of almost exactly the same length, though calculated on a different basis (seventy weeks of seven years). On the frequency of 40 in chronologies &c., see Bredow's Dissertatio de Georgii Syncelli Chronographia, prefixed to the Bonn ed. of Syncellus, ii. p. 53 ff.

in 1 K. 6<sup>1</sup>, however, a large discrepancy appears. The sum of the years of the oppressions and of the judges is four hundred and ten years. To this must be added the forty years in the wilderness; the days of Joshua, from the invasion of Canaan until he and all his generation passed away (Jud. 2<sup>7-10</sup>), for which no numbers are given ( $x$ ); the forty (or twenty) years of Eli (1 S. 4<sup>18</sup>); the years in which Samuel judged Israel (1 S. 7<sup>15</sup>), ( $y$ ), and the reign of Saul (1 S. 13<sup>1</sup>), ( $z$ ), for neither of which have we any data; the forty years of David (1 K. 2<sup>11</sup>); and four years of Solomon* before the building of the temple was begun: that is,  $40 + x + 40 + 40 + y + z + 40 + 4 = 534 + x + y + z$ . In this sum  $x + y + z$  (Joshua, Samuel, Saul) must represent a considerable number of years;† but even neglecting them, the total greatly exceeds the 480 of Kings. Various hypotheses have been proposed to bring them into harmony. One way by which this can be accomplished is to suppose that the oppressions and deliverances related in the Book of Judges were not successive, but in part synchronous. They were, in fact, without exception, local struggles; and it is not only conceivable, but highly probable, that while one part of the land was enjoying security under its judge, other tribes were groaning under the foreign yoke.‡ Thus Herzfeld supposes that for one hundred and seventeen years, from the victory of Othniel over the Aramaeans to the beginning of the Midianite forays, the history runs parallel; the subjection of the southern tribes by the Moabites, their deliverance by Ehud, and the long peace which followed, falling in the same period with the oppression of the north by the Canaanites, the war of liberation under Deborah and Barak, and the forty years' security which their

* According to the Hebrew way of reckoning.

† Josephus gives Joshua 25; Samuel 12; Samuel and Saul contemporaneously 18; Saul after the death of Samuel 22. The Christian chronologists do not differ very widely; Eusebius gives Joshua 27; Samuel and Saul jointly 40. We should hardly say that these estimates are excessive. For the whole period Josephus reckons 592 years (antt. viii. 3. 1 § 61; x. 8, 5 § 147) or 612 (antt. xx. 10, 1 § 230; c. Ap. ii. 2 § 19), or in still different ways; see P. Brinch, Examen chronologiae Flav. Josephi, c. 4; Herzfeld, Chronologia judicum, p. 12 f.

‡ On the considerations which may be urged in favour of the hypothesis of synchronisms, see Walther, in Zusätze zur Allg. Welthist., 1747, ii. p. 400 ff.<sup>o</sup> (cited by Bachmann).

victory gained.* This synchronism, which is not suggested by a syllable in the text of Judges, is only made out by a series of arbitrary assumptions, such as that nineteen years elapsed between the victory of Othniel and the Moabite invasion. With much greater show of probability, others suppose that the subjugation of the Israelites in Gilead by the Ammonites coincided with the oppression of their brethren in Canaan by the Philistines. Such an hypothesis not only offers no intrinsic difficulty, but seems to be commended by Jud. 10<sup>6-8</sup>, where we read that, as a punishment for their fresh defection, Yahweh sold the Israelites into the power of the Philistines and the Ammonites. In the following chapters, the author narrates, first, the Ammonite oppression, the deliverance of Gilead by Jephthah, and the rule of his successors, Ibzan, Elon, Abdon (ch. 11. 12); and then (13<sup>1</sup>) takes up the story of the long struggle with the Philistines which is so inseparably connected with the beginnings of the kingdom in Israel. The forty years of Philistine oppression, with which the forty years of Eli coincide, thus cover also the eighteen years of Ammonite rule east of the Jordan, the six of Jephthah, seven of Ibzan, ten of Elon (41), while the eight years of Abdon would fall in the time of Samuel. In this form the hypothesis was proposed by Sebastian Schmid; † and, often in combination with other synchronisms, has been accepted by many commentators and chronologists. ‡ In this way the length of the period is greatly reduced, but the exact equation with the four hundred and eighty years of 1 K. 6<sup>1</sup> is obtained only by attributing to the unknown quantities, x, y, and z, in the other member entirely arbitrary values. The most serious objection to the synchronistic hypothesis in any form is, that the chronology of the book is, on the face of it, continuous;

* That the twenty years of Canaanite oppression and the forty years of peace which followed fell in the eighty years of peace which the south enjoyed after the death of Eglon, is a hypothesis propounded by older chronologists (Beza, Marsham). Others think that the forty years' peace under Gideon in Central Palestine coincided with the forty years of Barak in the North; &c. On these and other theories see Ba., p. 64 f.

if the author had intended us to understand that the Ammonite and the Philistine oppressions were contemporaneous, he would have given a much more distinct intimation of his meaning than 10th, and have given it in its proper place in 13<sup>1</sup>.*

Nöldeke has tried to solve the problem in another way.† He observes that the sum of the rule of the Minor Judges, including Jephthah, is seventy-six years, to which if we add the four years of Solomon before the building of the temple, we obtain another eighty; a coincidence which can hardly be accidental, and which, if designed, shows that the Minor Judges were included in the chronological system of the book. The total of the years ascribed to the judges and kings in the Books of Judges and Samuel, down to the fourth year of Solomon, is three hundred and eighty.‡ To this must be added the forty years of Moses, the years of Joshua ( $x$ ), Samuel ( $y$ ), and Saul ( $z$ ): For Samuel he reckons (from 1 S. 7<sup>2</sup>) twenty years. We have thus:  $40 + 380 + 20 = 440 + x + z$ . In this system of forties we should naturally give to the unknown quantities (Joshua, Saul) twenty years each, or unequal numbers together making forty, obtaining thus exactly the four hundred and eighty of 1 K. 6. The years of foreign domination and of usurpers are, as usual in Oriental chronologies, not counted; § the beginning of each judge's rule being reckoned, not from the victory which brought him into power, but from the death of his predecessor. ||

In principle, this appears to me the most probable hypothesis. I should be inclined, however, to divide the numbers somewhat differently. For Eli, instead of the forty years of 39, I should * Compare the formal synchronisms in the Books of Kings.

‡ Othniel 40, Ehud 80, Barak 40, Gideon 40, Minor Judges 76 + 4 of Solomon = 80, Samson 20, Eli 40, David 40 = 380.

§ Nöldeke makes the sum of these years 94; viz. Cushan 8, Eglon 18, Jabin 20, Midianites 7, Abimelech 3, Ammonites 18, Philistines 20 (deducting the twenty in the days of Samson, Jud. 15<sup>20</sup>).

|| This is the method of Jewish and early Christian chronologers; see Euseb., Chron. ed. Schoene, ii. p. 35: post mortem Jesu subjectos tenuerunt Hebraeos alienigenae annis 8, qui junguntur Gothonielis temporibus, secundum Judaeorum traditiones; and so in every following case. So also Seder Olam, c. 12, and the Jewish commentators; see Meyer, Seder Olam, p. 383 ff.

adopt the reading of Q, twenty. The forty years of Philistine rule coincide with the time of Samson (20) and Eli (20); Samuel liberated Israel from their yoke (1 S. 7). Abimelech is not counted in the succession of rulers, as Nöldeke and most recent chronologists rightly assume;* but it does not appear to have been noted that the same is true of Saul. For the Judæan author of this chronology his rule was illegitimate; David was the immediate successor of Samuel.† This inference is confirmed by 1 S. 13<sup>1</sup>, where a later hand has attempted to supply the lack of a statement about the length of Saul's reign with the usual formula borrowed from the Books of Kings, ‡ but seems to have left the numbers blank.

We have, then, the following scheme: Moses 40 years, Joshua x, Othniel 40, Ehud 80, Barak 40, Gideon 40, the Minor Judges with Jephthah 76, Samson 20, Eli 20, Samuel y, David 40, Solomon  $4 = 400 + x + y = 480$ . We may then suppose that the author gave Joshua and Samuel forty years each, an hypothesis which in each case has some slight external support. Joshua lived, like his ancestor Joseph, to the age of 110 years, which, as in Joseph's life, § may most naturally be divided into  $30 + 40 + 40$ . To Samuel, of whose life and work he had such a full account, the deliverer and judge, the maker and unmaker of kings, it is antecedently improbable that the author reckoned only half a generation; especially as Samuel was an old man when he died.

If 1 K. 6<sup>1</sup> is the summation of the numbers in Judges and Samuel, and from the same hand, it would follow that the systematic chronology in Judges was not introduced by the Deuteronomic author, but by a later editor, who may have substituted his own cyclic numbers for older ones. || But the author of Judges may, himself, conceivably have constructed his chronology on a basis of forty years to the generation. In either case, the length of the oppressions, and of the rule of the Minor Judges (with

§ 8. Hebrew Text and Ancient Versions.

The text of Judges has been transmitted to us in a much purer state than that of the Books of Samuel; indeed, it is better preserved than any other of the historical books; but it is not entirely free from the errors which are incident to transcription. The variants of Hebrew manuscripts seldom enable us to correct these errors. Setting aside the great mass of purely heterographic variations, there are few that materially affect the sense; and of these, very few which are intrinsically superior to the Massoretic text. The critic cannot entirely disregard them, however; especially when the support of the Targum or other of the versions shows that the reading is old.*

* For the Massoretic text (מס) I have generally followed Baer, Libri Josuae et Judicum, 1891. The admirable edition of the Bible by J. H. Michaelis (1720) has also been constantly before me, and I have derived much help from Norzi's critical commentary, Minchath Shai, in the Mantua Bible of 1742. For the readings of Hebrew manuscripts and early editions I have relied on J. B. De Rossi, Variae lectiones Veteris Testamenti, vol. ii., 1785, which embodies all that is useful

Much more important aid in the restoration of the text is given by the ancient versions. First among these in critical value as well as in age are the Greek versions. I say versions; for Lagarde has demonstrated in the most conclusive way, by printing them face to face through five chapters, that we have two Greek translations of Judges.* It would probably be going too far to affirm that they are independent; the author of the younger of them may have known and used the older; but it is certain that his work is not a recension or revision of his predecessor's, but a new translation. One of these versions is represented by the great majority of manuscripts, including the uncials, Sarraavianus (<sup>s</sup>),† Alexandrinus (<sup>A</sup>),‡ Coislinianus (<sup>P</sup>),§ Basiliano-Vaticanus (<sup>V</sup>),|| and many cursives. The latter form several well-defined groups, some of which may properly be designated as recensions. One of these (<sup>L</sup>) is represented in Judges by codd. 19, 108, 118 (Holmes and Parsons),¶ the Complutensian Polyglot, and Lagarde's Librorum V. T. canonicorum pars prior, 1883; and is thought by many scholars to exhibit the recension of Lucian. The second (<sup>M</sup>) is a group whose most constant members are codd. 54, in Kennicott's collations. For the Massora, besides Jacob ben Chayim's edition in the Venice Rabbinical Bible, I have chiefly consulted Frensdorff's edition of the Ochla we-Ochla, 1864, and his Massoretisches Wörterbuch, 1876: Ginsburg's huge work will be of little use until the volume of apparatus appears.

* Septuaginta Studien, 1892, p. 1-72. I had reached the same conclusion in a paper read at the meeting of the Society of Biblical Literature in May, 1890, before I learned, through a letter from Prof. Lagarde, that he was preparing this edition.

59, 75, 82, which are frequently joined by others. A Leipzig palimpsest (uncial) published by Tischendorf also belongs to this group.* This hitherto inedited recension exhibits the text of Theodoret.† A third group (°) consists of the Venice manuscripts 120 and 121, with the Aldine edition, which is derived from them.‡ Most of the translations made from the Greek follow this version; so the Old Latin (l), § the Hexaplar Syriac of Paul of Tella (s), || the Ethiopic (e), ¶ and the Armenian.**

The Hexaplar codices (<sup>SP al.</sup>) and the Hexaplar Syriac show that this version was the basis of Origen's critical labours. It is, therefore, presumptively the oldest Greek translation of Judges; and in so far as "Septuagint" is equivalent to "the oldest Greek version," the text of <sup>A</sup> and its congeners might justly lay claim to that designation.†† It seems to me desirable, however, in the interests of clearness that the name, with all its misleading associations, should be banished from critical use.

The other version is found in the Vatican Codex (<sup>B</sup>), Cod. Musei Britannici Add. 20002 (<sup>G</sup>), ‡‡ and a considerable group of cursives in Holmes and Parsons (<sup>N</sup>); viz. 16, 30, 52, 53, 58, 63, 77, 85 (text), 131, 144, 209, 236, 237; the text printed in the

§ The scanty fragments of the Old Latin were collected by Sabatier, and reprinted, with a few gleanings, by Fritzsche, Liber Judicum secundum LXX interpretes, 1867. More considerable additions are gathered by Vercellone in his apparatus to the Vulgate (ii., 1864).

|| This version was made in the year 616-617 A.D., in Egypt, from a Hexaplar codex; see Gwynne, in Smith's Dict. of Christ. Biography, iv. p. 266 ff. Catena Nicephori represents this family. Grabe, in 1705, proved that this version was of Egyptian origin; \* a conclusion which is brilliantly confirmed by the fact, that of all the secondary versions only the Sahidic (k) is based upon it.† As the quotations in the Alexandrian Fathers from the 2d to the 4th century (Clement, Origen, Didymus) ‡ follow the version represented by  $\mathfrak{C}^A$  and its congeners, while Cyrill uses the text which we find in  $\mathfrak{C}^{BGN}k$ , § the conjecture is not remote that the latter translation of Judges was made in the 4th century; but much remains to be done before any positive conclusion can be reached.

In this state of the case, I have thought it proper to adduce the evidence of the Greek versions with more fulness than would ordinarily be necessary in a commentary. If the Greek version is to be used at all for the emendation of the Hebrew text, it must be used critically; and to operate, as older commentators did, with "A" and "B," or as some more modern scholars do, with Tischendorf's reprint of the Roman edition and Lagarde's "Lucian," taking the one or the other for "Septuagint" upon the intrinsic probability of readings, is not a critical procedure. ||

The Latin version of Jerome is one of the best specimens of his skill as a translator; and is exegetically of the greatest value, because it gives not merely Jerome's own interpretation, but that of his Jewish teachers and helpers. It is of less assistance to the textual critic, because the Hebrew text from which it was made was substantially the Jewish standard text which, having been authoritatively fixed in the 2d century, A.D., has been transmitted to us with great fidelity. For the Latin text itself we have an excellent apparatus in Vercellone, Variae lectiones vulgatae latinae Bibliorum editionis, ii. 1864.

The Syrian Vulgate (Peshitto) also represents in the main the Hebrew Standard text, and is of more importance to the interpreter than to the critic. For the Peshitto, which exhibits a constancy second only to that of the Hebrew, I have compared, in places where its variations seemed to be significant, the editio princeps of Gabriel Sionita in the Paris Polyglot ( $\mathfrak{S}^P$ ), from which that in the London Polyglot ( $\mathfrak{S}^L$ ) is derived immediately, and that of Lee at one remove; the photolithographic reproduction of the Ambrosian codex ( $\mathfrak{S}^A$ ); the Nestorian text as edited by Justin Perkins at Ooroomiah in 1852 ( $\mathfrak{S}^O$ ); and an old and excellent manuscript of the Historical Books and the Wisdom of the O.T., of Nestorian origin, belonging to the Harvard Semitic Museum, Cambridge, Mass. ( $\mathfrak{S}^H$ ).

The Targum is seldom of much critical value, but often serves us well as a commentary upon the punctuation, and fills an important place in the history of Jewish exegesis. Its text exhibits considerable variation. I have compared, in critical places, the edition by Felix Pratensis in the first of Bomberg's Great Bibles, 1518 ( $\mathfrak{T}^{\text{ven.1}}$ ), that by Jacob ben Chayim in the second of those Bibles, 1525 ( $\mathfrak{T}^{\text{ven.2}}$ ); \* Buxtorf's rifacimento of the latter in his Great Bible, 1618-20,† reproduced in the London Polyglot; the Antwerp Polyglot; and Lagarde's edition of the Targum from the great Codex Reuchlinianus at Carlsruhe, Prophetæ chaldaice, 1872 ( $\mathfrak{T}^{\text{reuch.}}$ ). I also collated, in 1888, Codex. Brit. Mus. Orient., 2210, a manuscript from Southern Arabia with supralinear punctuation, dated A.D. 1469 ( $\mathfrak{T}^m$ ).‡

The only systematic attempt to employ the versions for the emendation of the Hebrew text of Judges is made by A. v. Doorninck, Bijdrage tot de tekstkritiek van Richteren i.-xvi., 1879.

rue, ii. p. 458-478) have very little exegetical merit. Theodoret in his Quaestiones (Opp. ed. Schulze, i. p. 321-345) discusses with some fulness a number of the more obscure or difficult passages in Judges with candour and skill. His extensive quotations are of importance for the history of the Greek text. The commentary of Procopius of Gaza (Migne, Patrologia graeca, lxxxvii. 1041-1080), though fragmentary and largely allegorical, is not devoid of worth. The Catena Nicephori (Leipzig, 1773) draws chiefly from Josephus, Theodoret, and Procopius, but quotes also a considerable number of anonymous Greek expositions. Augustine wrote Quaestiones on Judges, as on the other books of the Heptateuch (Migne, Patrologia latina, xxxiv. 791-824); so did Isidore of Seville (ib. lxxxiii. 379-390). We have also a commentary on Judges by Ephrem Syrus (Opp. i. p. 308-330).

The patristic exegesis had only the versions to work upon; the history of the interpretation of the Hebrew text begins with the Jewish commentators of the Middle Ages.* Of these, R. Solomon Isaaki, commonly called "Rashi" (1040-1105 A.D.), in many ways deserves the foremost place which the judgement of Jewish scholars generally accords him. He has two of the greatest and rarest gifts of the commentator, the instinct to discern precisely the point at which explanation is necessary, and the art of giving or indicating the needed help in the fewest words. He had an almost unequalled knowledge not only of the Bible, but of the whole vast body of Jewish tradition. His interpretation adheres more closely to the exegetical tradition than that of his successors, and very often agrees with Jerome's, that is, Jerome's Jewish teachers. R. David Kimchi (ca. 1160-1235) gave much more prominence to the grammatical and lexical side of the commentator's task, in which he excelled; he is a judicious interpreter and a lucid expositor. Of much less note is R. Levi ben Gerson ("Ralbag," died ca. 1370), whose commentary is printed with Rashi and Kimchi in the Rabbinical Bibles of Venice and Basel. Besides these are to be named, Abarbanel (1437-1508), whose very diffuse commentary is in Judges largely dependent on Levi ben Gerson; † and Solomon ben Melech, Michlol Yophi (Amsterdam, 1684), a convenient exegetical hand-book, chiefly abridged from Kimchi.

† I have used the ed. of Leipzig, 1686.

Through the Postillae perpetuae of Nicolaus a Lyra (ca. 1270-1340) the Jewish exegesis, and what was even more important, a sounder exegetical method, passed over into the Church. Later Catholic commentators of note are Arias Montanus, De varia Republica, 1592; Serarius, 1609; Jac. Bonfrerius, 1631; Cornelius a Lapide, 1642; Th. Malvenda, 1650.*

Among the early Protestant commentators, Sebastian Münster (1489-1552) follows the Jewish interpreters, particularly Kimchi, very closely. Drusius's (1550-1616) learning had a wider range; besides the rabbinical commentaries he made good use of the ancient Greek versions and the Fathers, and deserves the praise which R. Simon gives him as the most learned and judicious of the interpreters whose works are collected in the Critici Sacri. The fragmentary annotations of Grotius often contain interesting illustrations and parallels from Greek and Roman writers. Of all the older commentaries by far the best, and one of the most valuable commentaries on Judges, is that of Sebastian Schmid (1684). The author brings together into his 1642 solid quarto pages all that had been done before him for the interpretation of the book. His own exegetical judgement is clear and sound. In excursus at the end of each chapter (Quaestiones), the difficulties of every kind are discussed with great thoroughness. The commentary of Clericus (1708), a work of a more modern type, is also deservedly held in high esteem. The marginal annotations in J. H. Michaelis's edition of the Hebrew Bible (1720) are excellent; nor must the notes to J. D. Michaelis's German translation (1774) be passed over. Rosenmüller's Scholia on Judges (1835) contain very little that is new.

The modern period of interpretation begins with G. L. Studer's admirable commentary,† in which the problems that the book presents to criticism and critical exegesis were first clearly recognized, and a long step taken toward their solution. Bertheau's commentary in the "Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch" (1845) is a work of less originality, but, especially in the second edition (1883),

* Of these I have read only a Lyra and a Lapide. Serarius I know through Schmid.

† Das Buch der Richter, 1835; second (title) edition, 1842.

fills a useful place. Reuss has given, in French (1877) and German (1892), brilliant translations of Judges, with introductions, and brief but excellent notes. Keil (1863; * 2 ed. 1874) has the stamp of the manufactured article; Cassel (in Lange, 1865; † 2 ed. 1887) is full of curious learning and ingeniously perverse exegesis. By far the fullest recent commentary on Judges is that of J. Bachmann (1868), which was unfortunately never carried beyond the fifth chapter. The author's standpoint is that of Hengstenberg, and he is a stanch opponent of modern criticism of every shade and school; but in range and accuracy of scholarship, and exhaustive thoroughness of treatment, his volume stands without a rival. Other modern commentaries which require no special note are those of Hervey in the "Speaker's Commentary" (1872) and in the "Pulpit Commentary" (1881); and Jamieson, in Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown's "Critical and Experimental Commentary." A. R. Fausset's Critical and Expository Commentary on Judges (1885) is "expository" in the homiletic sense, and "critical" in no sense at all. The German translation of Judges in Kautzsch's Das Alte Testament, 1894 (by Kittel), embodies in a sober and conservative spirit the results of modern critical scholarship.

A COMMENTARY ON THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

I. 1-II. 5. The conquests and settlements of the Israelite tribes in Canaan.

LITERATURE. — E. Meyer, "Kritik der Berichte über die Eroberung Palaestinas," ZATW. i. 1881, p. 117-146; cf. Stade, ibid., p. 146-150.

At the opening of the narrative, we have to suppose the Israelite tribes encamped in the plain of Jericho ( $\text{I}^{16} \text{2}^1$ ), and about to invade the hill-country. They inquire of the oracle what tribe shall first attack the Canaanites. Agreeably to its response, Judah together with Simeon begins the invasion ( $\text{v}^{1-3}$ ). They defeat and capture Adoni-bezek, and, advancing southward, take Hebron, Debir, and Hormah, making themselves masters of the mountains, but are unable to conquer the coast plain ( $\text{v}^{4-21}$ ). The tribe of Joseph invades the central highlands, and takes Bethel ( $\text{v}^{22-26}$ ), but has to leave many strong towns, especially along the Great Plain, in the hands of the Canaanites ( $\text{v}^{27-29}$ ). In the north, no conquests are recorded; the Israelites settle in the midst of the native population ( $\text{v}^{30-33}$ ). In the west, Dan is crowded back into the mountains ( $\text{v}^{34-36}$ ). The Angel of Yahweh removes from Gilgal to "Bochim." \* He reproves Israel for making terms with the people of the land and sparing their places of worship, and foretells the consequences of this disobedience.

The words of the Angel show how ch. 1 is to be regarded in its present connexion. The failure of the invaders to conquer the whole land at once is not due to the strength of its walled towns, or the superiority of their inhabitants in the art and enginery of war, but to Israel's slackness in carrying out the root and branch policy enjoined in Ex. 34<sup>11-16</sup> 23<sup>31b-33</sup> Dt. 7<sup>1-5</sup> &c. As a punishment, Yahweh leaves the Canaanites whom they have guiltily spared to be the cause of all the ills denounced in those passages. Their religion is the snare into which Israel is ever afresh falling. The repeated apostasies and ensuing judgements which are the subject of the Book of Judges have their origin in the primal act of disobedience, that Israel did not exterminate the inhabitants of the land. From this point of view, ch. 1, with its long list of cities remaining in the hands of the Canaanites, including many of the most important places in Central and Northern Palestine, forms a fitting introduction to the present Book of Judges.

It had, however, no place in the original plan of the book, but has been introduced by a later editor. For, a, the Introduction gives, in the proper place (3<sup>1-6</sup>), an enumeration of the native races remaining in Canaan, or on its borders, which makes no reference to ch. 1 and is not entirely consonant with it. b, Jud. 2<sup>6-10</sup> is the immediate continuation, in sense and structure, of Jos. 24<sup>27</sup>.* The intrusion of Jud. 1<sup>1b-2<sup>5</sup></sup> between two consecutive sentences of the narrative led later, perhaps in connexion with the division into books, to the creation of a new close for Jos. 24, v. 28-31 being restored from Jud. 2<sup>6-9</sup>,† while v. 32-33 are fragmentary notices from another source which came in appropriately at the end of the history of that generation.

The whole character of Jud. 1<sup>1-2<sup>5</sup></sup> gives evidence that it was not composed for the place, but is an extract from an older history of the Israelite occupation of Canaan. It has not, however, been preserved just as it was in the original source. The editor, to whom its value lay, not in what it told of the conquests of Israel, but in the evidence it gave of the incompleteness of the conquest, that is, of the unfaithfulness of Israel, has apparently abridged and adapted it to his purpose; and the trace of still later hands is probably to be recognized in certain additions and changes.

* The translations of Jud. 2<sup>6</sup> in AV. and RV., which conceal this fact, are grammatically false.

† A careful comparison of the two passages will show clearly, I think, that this is their true relation, and not, as is still commonly assumed, that Jud. 2<sup>6-10</sup> was borrowed by the Deuteronomic author of Judges from Jos. 24<sup>28-31</sup>. Comp. the somewhat similar case, Ezra 1<sup>1-3a</sup> = 2 Chr. 36<sup>22f</sup>.

Ch. 1<sup>1a</sup> is an editorial title corresponding to Jos. 1<sup>1</sup>; v.<sup>4</sup>, superfluous and disturbing by the side of v.<sup>6-7</sup>, is probably secondary; v.<sup>8</sup>, an interpolation induced by v.<sup>7b</sup>, directly contradicting v.<sup>21</sup> Jos. 15<sup>63</sup> cf. Jud. 19<sup>10-12</sup> 2 S. 5<sup>6ff.</sup>; v.<sup>9</sup> makes the impression of a general summary by a later hand; v.<sup>10. 20</sup> are severed parts of the original, which may be restored by the help of Jos. 15<sup>13f.</sup>; v.<sup>18</sup> flatly contradicts v.<sup>19</sup>, and is, like v.<sup>8</sup>, in conflict with the facts; v.<sup>21</sup> = Jos. 15<sup>63</sup>, with the change of the original Judah to Benjamin, in conformity with later representations of the partition of the land; v.<sup>19. 21</sup>, or perhaps <sup>21. 19</sup>, originally stood after v.<sup>7</sup>. The story of the conquests of Joseph is disproportionately meagre, and has very likely been abridged by the editor; Budde, with considerable probability, conjectures that Jos. 17<sup>14-18</sup> Nu. 32<sup>39. 41. 42</sup> Jos. 13<sup>13</sup> originally stood in this connexion. The account of the settlement of the northern tribes may be similarly curtailed. With v.<sup>34f.</sup> Jos. 19<sup>47</sup> may once have been joined. In 2<sup>1-5</sup>, only v.<sup>1a. 5b</sup>, "The Angel of Yahweh went up from Gilgal to Bethel, . . . and they sacrificed there to Yahweh," can belong to the older narrative; v.<sup>1b-5a</sup> are in the characteristic manner of the redaction of Judges. On all this, see more fully below in the commentary.

Although thus by no means intact, the passage presents, after the manifest interpolations have been removed, a sufficiently orderly and intelligible connexion. Recent criticism has thus set aside the hypothesis of compilation (Stud.; cf. Preiss, ZWT. 1892, p. 496), and must qualify the strong terms in which the confusion and fragmentariness of the chapter has often been spoken of, e.g. by Kuenen.

Fragments of this narrative are also preserved in different places in the Book of Joshua: Jos. 15<sup>13-19</sup> = Jud. 1<sup>10-15. 20</sup>; Jos. 15<sup>63</sup> = Jud. 1<sup>21</sup>; Jos. 16<sup>10</sup> = Jud. 1<sup>20</sup>; Jos. 17<sup>11-13</sup> = Jud. 1<sup>27f.</sup> As these passages, which in Judges stand in good connexion, are in Joshua broken up and scattered, fitting so loosely in the context that it would frequently gain by their removal, and strikingly at variance with the prevailing tenor of the book, the explanation which first suggests itself is that they have been inserted in Joshua directly from Judges by a relatively late hand.* Against this must be set, however, the fact, properly emphasized by Budde, that in more than one of these parallels, Jos. has preserved the original text, while in Jud. it has been intentionally altered; see especially v.<sup>10, 20, 19, 21</sup>. This is better explained by supposing that the extracts in Joshua were made, not from Jud. 1, but from the history from which the latter chapter was taken.† The hypothesis is confirmed by the fact that, as Dillmann ‡ and Budde § have shown, there are other passages in Joshua, to which there is no parallel in Jud. 1, which are almost certainly derived from the same source, viz. Jos. 13<sup>13</sup> (cf. Jud. 1<sup>27, 29, 21</sup>) 19<sup>47</sup> ¶, and especially 17<sup>14-18</sup>.||

This source was not improbably J's history of the conquest.¶ The author of the Book of Joshua uses J pretty freely in the beginning of his history of the invasion down to the taking of Ai and the treaty with the Gibeonites (8. 9); but in the following chapters, which narrate the great victories of Joshua (10-12), and the division of the land (13 ff.), he abandons this source, assumably because its account of the gradual and imperfect subjugation of Canaan by the tribes severally was irreconcilable with his own unhistorical representation of the complete conquest of the land by Joshua at the head of all Israel, the extermination of all its inhabitants, and partition of the conquered territory. Jud. 1<sup>1-25</sup>, with the cognate fragments in Jos. 13 ff., accords very well with the undoubted excerpts from J in Jos. 1-9; the whole tenor and style of the narrative resembles that of J in the Pentateuch; as particular indications may be noted the precedence of Judah, the name Canaanites, the resort to the oracle, the Angel of Yahweh. The only positive argument of considerable weight on the other side is the meagreness of the relation in Jud. 1, the almost statistical character of much of it, in contrast to the free and vivid narration of J.* If, however, as there is independent reason for believing, the editor of Jud. 1 has greatly abridged the older history, this loses much of its force.

* So Hävernick, Bl., Be., Mey., Kue., HCO<sup>2</sup>, Reuss, al.—On the relation between these passages in Jos. and Jud., there are other special investigations by Welte, 1842; Keil, Z. Luth. Th. 1846, p. 1 ff. The hypothesis that Jud. 1 is a compilation from the Book of Jos. (Stähelin, Krit. Untersuchungen, p. 102 ff.; Preiss, ZWTh. 1892, p. 496) is sufficiently refuted by the facts stated above in the text. Further, Jud. 1 contains other matter of the same sort (e.g. v.<sup>22-27</sup>) which has no parallel in Jos. That this also once stood in Jos., and was omitted, perhaps by R<sup>d</sup>, an alternative proposed by Di. (NDJ. p. 442), is not probable.

The age of the original of Jud. 1 cannot be certainly determined from anything in the chapter itself. It is inferred from v.<sup>21</sup> (the Benjamites live with the Jebusites in Jerusalem "unto this day") that it was written before the conquest of Zion by David, 2 S. 5; † but 2 S. 24<sup>10ff</sup> shows that the Jebusites were not expelled by David; cf. also 1 K. 9<sup>20f</sup>. ‡ On the other hand, v.<sup>28, 33</sup> describe a state of things which can hardly have existed before the reign of David or Solomon; v.<sup>29</sup> (cf. 6 and Jos. 16<sup>10</sup>) is probably to be read in the light of 1 K. 9<sup>16</sup>, which would bring us down at least to the time of Solomon. There are no historical references in the chapter which conflict with our ascription of it to J.

Whether this be its origin or not, Jud. 1 is, beyond dispute, one of the most precious monuments of early Hebrew history. It contains an account of the invasion and settlement of Western Palestine entirely different from that given in the Book of Joshua, and of vastly greater historical value. In Joshua, the united armies of Israel, under the command of Joshua, in two campaigns (10. 11) conquer all Palestine from the Lebanon to the southern desert, and ruthlessly exterminate its entire population. The land is partitioned among the tribes (13 ff.), who have only to enter and take possession of the territory allotted to them. In Jud. 1, on the contrary, the tribes invade the land singly, or as they are united by common interest; they fight for their own hand with varying success, or settle peaceably among the older population.

* König, Einleitung, p. 252 f. König exaggerates, however, when he speaks of Jud. 1 as an "ungeschmückte, wortarme Zusammenstellung von Thatsachen." Against the ascription of the chapter to J, see also Be., p. xviii., and Kue., HCO<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 357. † Ba., Ke., Cass., Kö., with Jewish (Ki.) and older Christian scholars.

‡ Budde ("Critical Notes on the Hebrew Text of Samuel") understands 2 S. 5<sup>8</sup> itself as forbidding the slaughter of the Jebusites.

The larger cities with few exceptions, the fertile valleys, and the seaboard plain remain in the hands of the Canaanites. For long, the Israelites were really masters only in the mountains of Central and Southern Canaan, and the two strongest tribes, Joseph and Judah, were completely separated from each other by a line of Canaanite strongholds having Jerusalem as its salient.* On the other side, the Great Plain and the fortified cities along its southern margin separated Joseph from the tribes which settled farther north.

Which of these two conflicting representations of the Israelite invasion is the truer, cannot be for a moment in question. All that we know of the history of Israel in Canaan in the succeeding centuries confirms the representation of Jud. that the subjugation of the land by the tribes was gradual and partial; that not only were the Canaanites not extirpated, but that many cities and whole regions remained in their possession; that the conquest of these was first achieved by the kings David and Solomon. On the other hand, the whole political and religious history of these centuries would be unintelligible if we were to imagine it as beginning with such a conquest of Canaan as is narrated in the Book of Joshua. The song of Deborah alone is sufficient to prove this representation altogether false.

From the place in which it stands, and the fact that several of the most important things related in it, such as the taking of Hebron, are also narrated in Jos. in connexion with the conquests of Joshua, Jud. 1 has sometimes been explained as, in the main, a recapitulation of events which happened in the lifetime of Joshua. So Thdt., quaest., 7 (cf. 1), Ki., Abarb., Cler., Schm., Ziegler, Hgstb., Böhl. But, as has been observed above, the parallel passages in Joshua are not an organic part of that book, with whose entire conception of the character of the conquest they but ill accord, and therefore their position does not prove that the events they relate occurred at the time to which they are ascribed by their present context. Others, following the title, v.<sup>1a</sup>, put the events related in Jud. 1 "after the death of Joshua."† So among

† The parallels in Jos. are then explained as anticipatory; that is, the author of that book, in narrating the conquests of Israel, for the sake of completeness, introduced, out of their chronological order, certain things which were not accomplished till a later time; Aug., quaest., 3 (but cf. 6), Glossa ord., Ra; RLbG., Brenz, Ba., al. Others, while putting the greater part of the chapter after the death of modern scholars, Ke., Ba., Be., Cass. This title of the canonical editor (see comm.) is, however, of no authority. In point of fact, the situation presupposed in Jud. I and the invasion there described, is, in its character and results, inconceivable if the land in all its length and breadth had already been conquered and its inhabitants exterminated by Joshua. We require, at least, some reference to the revolution by which all the results of Joshua's wars were lost; we must know who sowed the land with dragon's teeth, that in the place of the population which Joshua destroyed, — man, woman, and child, — another generation better able to defend its own sprang up in a night. In default of this, the commentators and historians who treat Jud. I as a continuation of the history of the conquest after the death of Joshua are constrained to reduce to the uttermost the extent and importance of Joshua's victories. These victories, it is said, broke the power of the Canaanite confederacies in the north and south, so that they no longer presented a formidable front in the field, but by no means resulted in the subjugation of all Canaan. The fortified towns defied the invaders, or were speedily recovered by them. All over the land, as soon as the first wave of conquest passed, the Canaanites raised their heads again. The reduction of the strongholds, and the occupation of the territory allotted to each, was left to the tribes severally. In this task, some were more persistent and successful than others; some soon came to terms with the people of the land. It is this phase of the struggle that is described in Jud. I. The harmony thus established between Jos. and Jud. is only attained by substituting for the story of the conquest in Jos. 10-12 a rationalistic version which is as irreconcilable with the text of Jos. as Jud. I itself. Of such fruitless victories as left all the work to be done over, of strongholds unsubdued, or Canaanites left to garrison them, the Book of Joshua knows nothing. The register of Joshua's conquests, the cities which he gave to the tribes of Israel for a possession (ch. 12), contains not only the names of the cities which in Jud. I are taken by the several tribes (Hebron, Debir, Bethel), but of the far more numerous cities which, as we know both from Jud. I and the later history, remained Canaanite for generations, — Jerusalem, Gezer, Taanach, Megiddo, etc.

Jud. I can therefore only be understood as a history of the first conquests and settlements of the Israelite tribes in Western Palestine, a counterpart to the Book of Joshua, whose representation it contravenes at all essential points. So Stud., We., Mey., Sta., GVV. I. p. 66 f.; Kue., Bu., Kitt., Dr., Co.

In spite of the fundamental contradiction, there are striking agreements between the story of the conquest in Jos. and Jud. I. The struggle begins in the south (Adoni-zedek, king of Jerusalem, and Adoni-bezek, who dies at Jerusalem); the settlement of Judah and its affined clans is followed by that of Joseph (Jos. 14<sup>6-15</sup> 15<sup>1-12</sup> 13-19 16<sup>1ff.</sup> 17<sup>14-18</sup>); the other tribes are provided for Joshua, have referred certain of the events narrated in it to the last years of his life; so Chytraeus (v. 8-16), Eichh. (v. 10-15), Schnurrer (v. 10<sup>ff.</sup> 20); or without attempting to discriminate, v. Lengerke, Wahl.

later, and their standing is different from that of the great southern and central tribes (Jos. 18<sup>ff.</sup>). Jos. 11 is unquestionably related to Jud. 4 (Jabin of Hazor), as Jos. 10 is to Jud. 1<sup>5-7</sup>. The account of the conquest in Joshua is the product of successive theological reconstructions of the history. Its basis seems to have been a relation closely akin to the original of Jud. 1, if not identical with it; but this historical basis is completely transformed by the ascription of the doings of the several tribes to all Israel, and of the events of succeeding generations to the first period of the invasion, and by the substitution of the theological ideal of a conquest by the people of Yahweh for the sober reality.

I. 1<sup>a</sup>. Title. — After the death of Joshua] cf. Jos. 1<sup>1</sup>. From the hand of the canonical editor to divide the books of Jos. and Jud.* The death of Joshua marked the close of the period of conquest, as that of Moses (Dt. 34<sup>56</sup>) the end of the Exodus and wandering. The division is therefore a natural one, and the title stands in a suitable place after Jos. 24<sup>29, 30</sup>.† What immediately follows, however (1<sup>b</sup>–2<sup>5</sup>), does not relate things which took place after the death of Joshua; but is an account of the invasion of Canaan and its results, running parallel to Jos., but giving a wholly different representation; see above, p. 7–9.

I. 1<sup>b</sup>–8. The Israelites inquire of the oracle what tribe shall first attack the Canaanites. Judah is designated, and, making common cause with Simeon, invades the land. They defeat and capture Adoni-bezek.

The original connexion of 1<sup>b</sup> is lost. It must have been preceded at least by an account of the passage of the Jordan and the taking of Jericho, the remains of which are probably still to be recognized in the composite narrative in Jos.; perhaps also by a preliminary division of the land to be conquered (v.<sup>3</sup>). Whether we should also include an account of the operations against Ai (Jos. 8) and the oldest version of the ruse of the Gibeonites (Jos. 9) is more doubtful.‡

* See Doorn, p. 17, and esp. Paine, Bibliotheca Sacra, 1891, p. 652 ff. A somewhat similar suggestion is made by Ziegler, Theol. Abhandlungen, i. (1791), p. 282.

1. The Israelites inquired of Yahweh] consulted the oracle of Y.; cf. 18<sup>5</sup>. The phrase does not occur in the Hexateuch, in which the only reference to the consultation of the oracle (Nu. 27<sup>21</sup> P<sub>2</sub>) is differently expressed. It is used not only of the oracle of Yahweh, but of a 'stock' (Hos. 4<sup>12</sup>); teraphim (Ez. 21<sup>26</sup>); manes (1 Chr. 10<sup>13</sup>). It is natural here to think of the priestly oracle (18<sup>5</sup> 1 S. 22<sup>10-13.15</sup>), by the ephod (1 S. 23<sup>9</sup> 30<sup>7</sup>), or urim and thummim (1 S. 14<sup>41</sup> 6). As in the Pentateuch the latter is in the hands of the High Priest only, Jewish and many Christian interpreters have inferred that the response on this occasion was given by Phineas, son of Eleazar,* but it is unsafe to ascribe this intention to the author, who more probably has in mind the oracle at Gilgal (2<sup>1</sup>), long one of the most frequented holy places. The Israelites are, of course, the tribes which settled west of the Jordan.† The story supposes them encamped together in the plain near Jericho (1<sup>16</sup>) and Gilgal (2<sup>1</sup>), from which point they separate, Judah and Simeon to invade the south, Joseph to occupy the central highlands.

That the tribes, which before the death of Joshua had taken possession of their partially subjugated allotments, now held a council at Shiloh (Procop., a Lap., Ba.) to plan measures against the Canaanites who were left in their several territories; that from the council they returned home and opened a series of campaigns in different parts of the land, Judah making the first attack (Ba.), is a figment without the slightest warrant in the text.

Their question is not, Who shall lead us in a joint expedition? ‡ or, What tribe shall have the hegemony? § but, What tribe shall first invade its own region? || as the response and the following narrative clearly show, and as, indeed, the language requires. — The Canaanites] collective name for the inhabitants of the land; see on 3<sup>3</sup>. interpretation which is neither warranted by the text here, nor consonant with the representation of Jos. (cf. 11<sup>16-20</sup>).* — 2. The oracle designates Judah. In Jos. also the first victories of Israel are gained in the south (ch. 10), and Judah is the first of the tribes west of the Jordan to receive its allotment (ch. 14. 15). It has been suggested above that the author of Joshua had before him an account of the invasion of Canaan strongly resembling Jud. 1. Whether this precedence of Judah, like the part assigned to Judah in J's story of Joseph and his brethren, is to be attributed to the Judahite origin of the narrative, or whether it may preserve a reminiscence of the fact that Judah was the first of the tribes to establish itself in Canaan, cannot well be decided.† — 3. Judah said to Simeon his brother] utique tribus ad tribum (Aug). Simeon was the "brother" of Judah, not only as all the tribes of Israel were brethren, but in the closer kindred of the Leah tribes (Gen. 29<sup>32-35</sup>). The seats of Simeon were in the south of Judah; its towns (Jos. 19<sup>1-9</sup>) were all within the limits of Judah, and in Jos. 15<sup>26-32. 42</sup> are included in the list of the latter tribe (cf. also 1 Chr. 4<sup>28-33</sup>). On Simeon see further below, on v.<sup>17</sup>. Judah proposes that they unite their forces for the invasion, first of the territory of Judah, and then of the more southern district which fell to Simeon. The words imply that the invasion had not yet begun; the two tribes are encamped, with the others, at a point outside of the territory which they subsequently occupied, at Gilgal,‡ as we are to infer not only from 2<sup>1</sup> but probably also from Jos. 14-16; see below. — Into my allotted territory] The tribes go up, not to conquer for themselves a lot,§ but each to conquer its own lot. It is clearly presupposed that there was an understanding among them before the beginning of the invasion in what quarter each was to seek its fortune, a preliminary division of the land to be conquered.* It is probable that in its original connexion, v.<sup>1b</sup> was preceded by an account of this partition, and possible that traces of this account may be found in Jos. 14<sup>6ff</sup> 15<sup>1ff</sup> (Judah) and 16<sup>1ff</sup> (Joseph). It is noteworthy that in Jos. 14-16 these tribes only have their territory assigned to them at Gilgal. In what manner the author of Jud. 1 conceived this division to have been made, we cannot certainly make out; the reference to the oracle (v.<sup>1f</sup>) and the term "allotment" suggest the sacred lot; cf. Jos. 18<sup>6-10</sup>. Whether such a partition of the land actually took place is a question for historical criticism; † the language of these verses leaves no doubt that the author so represented it.

general statement of the result of the campaign which is related in detail in v.<sup>5-7</sup>,* it is very clumsy; nor are the interpretations more satisfactory which refer v.<sup>4</sup> and <sup>5</sup> to successive moments in the invasion, whether, with Bertheau, we suppose that after a first defeat near Bezek, in which he lost 10,000 men, Adoni-bezek threw himself into the town, where he was again attacked and put to flight; or, with Cassel, that in the first battle Adoni-bezek was not engaged. In either case, we should expect the narrator to explain in some way the relation between the two defeats of the same people at the same place. Probably the redactor, having abridged his source by omitting the beginning of the story of Adoni-bezek, filled its place with these general phrases borrowed from the context.

E. Meyer (ZATW. i. p. 135) regards v.<sup>4</sup> (except הפריז and perh. the number 10,000) as derived from J, and rejects v.<sup>5</sup> as repetition; he finds other grounds for suspicion in v.<sup>7b</sup> compared with v.<sup>21</sup>, and in the use of אלהים, v.<sup>7a</sup>, though he does not deny that the story of Adoni-bezek may have an historical basis. Kue. doubts the whole of v.<sup>4-7</sup> on historical grounds; Matthes ascribes v.<sup>6.7</sup> to the last hand (canonical editor). See against Mey. and Kue., Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 3 f. Kitt. (GdH. i. 1. p. 241) thinks that in v.<sup>4</sup> the words, And Y. gave the Canaanites into their power, may be genuine, which is certainly not impossible.

Judah alone is named (cf. v.<sup>8.9.10</sup> — prob. all secondary). — Their hand . . . they smote] the men of Judah; the common distributive plural with a collective noun. On the Canaanites and Perizzites, and on Bezek, see on v.<sup>5</sup>. — Ten thousand men] 3<sup>29</sup> (they slew of Moab ten thousand men) 4<sup>6</sup> 7<sup>3</sup> 20<sup>34</sup> 2 K. 14<sup>7</sup> &c.; a common round number. — 5. They came upon Adoni-bezek at Bezek] if v. 4 (Judah went up) is from the hand of an editor, the plural probably referred originally to the allies, Judah and Simeon, v.<sup>3</sup>. There is good reason to suspect that the beginning of the story of Adoni-bezek, which would have told us who he was, and perhaps something of the circumstances under which the allies encountered him, has been omitted by the editor. — Bezek] the name occurs in the O.T. only in 1 S. 11<sup>8</sup>, where Saul musters at Bezek the force he has raised for the relief of Jabesh Gilead. The Bezek of 1 S. 11 is, without doubt, the modern Khirbet Ibziq, 14

* Abarb., Schm., Ke., Ba.

Engl. miles SSW. of Beisān, and a somewhat less distance from the mouth of Wady Yābis, of which it lies directly west. Many scholars identify the place in our text with this Bezek.* The situation, however, does not meet the requirements of the narrative at all. At the beginning of the story, Judah and Simeon set out from the neighbourhood of Gilgal to invade the region in which they were afterward settled; its end (v. 7) brings us to Jerusalem, and we should naturally infer that the battle took place at no great distance from that city.† Ibziq lies wholly outside of this sphere of action, and in an opposite direction. Others have therefore supposed that there was another, hitherto unidentified, Bezek in Judah, ‡ and if the text be sound, this seems necessary. § Budde thinks that the name Bezek was introduced by an editor, who derived it merely from the name of the king Adoni-bezek; but after the words "they came upon A.," an indication of the scene of the encounter is certainly expected, || and this gap would not be filled by the words "king of Jerusalem," which Budde conceives originally to have stood in this place. A more serious difficulty is the name Adoni-bezek. This is generally explained, Lord of Bezek; but such a formation is altogether anomalous. No compound names of persons in Hebrew are made in this way from the name of a town, nor — if we should evade this objection by taking the words appellatively ¶ — is adōn used like melek of the sovereign of a city or country. In names compounded with adōn, the second part is uniformly the name of a god,** Adoni-zedek (Adōnī-Šedeq), Adoniram (Adōnī-Ram), Adonijah (Adōnī-Yahu).†† If § Sandys (1610) notes a Bezek 2 m. from Bethzur (Reland, p. 663), which does not seem to have been heard of by more recent travellers. Conder would identify Bezek with Bezkah, 6 m. SE. of Lydda (SWP. Memoirs, iii. p. 36). Schotanus suggested Bozkath (בזקה), Jos. 15<sup>39</sup>. Cass. takes the noun appellatively, the 'stony desert' W. of the Dead Sea, without support in Heb. or intrinsic probability.

the name Adoni-bezek is sound, Bezek must be an otherwise unknown god, whose name, we might then suppose, the town also bore. The question is further complicated by Jos. 10, where, in an account which, notwithstanding its radical divergences, is parallel to Jud. 1<sup>1-7</sup>, and based on the same or a closely similar source, the head of the Canaanite confederacy which first makes front against the Israelite invaders is Adoni-zedek, king of Jerusalem. The latter is a normal formation which has a striking parallel in Melchi-zedek (Malki-Sedeq),* king of Jerusalem (Gen. 14). It seems probable, therefore, that in the place of the problematical Adoni-bezek, king (v.<sup>7</sup>) of some nameless city,† the original of Jud. 1 (J) had Adoni-zedek, king of Jerusalem.‡

Bezek (בזק) Euseb. (OS<sup>2</sup>. 237<sub>52</sub>) notes two neighbouring villages of the name, 17 R. m. from Neapolis, on the road to Scythopolis (Beth-shean). This is the Khirbet Ibziq of the Engl. Survey (Great Map, sh. 12; Memoirs, ii. p. 231, 237), 14 E. m. from Nābulus, with which Eshtori Parchi (A.D. 1322; ed. Venet. fol. 66<sup>b</sup>) had already identified it. — Adoni-bezek] Jerome (OS<sup>2</sup>. 318 cf. 2317) interprets dominus fulminis, or dominus meus fulgurans. The former might seem to be a possible Hebrew name; cf. Barak (ch. 4. 5); Βοαρέπες (Mar. 3<sup>17</sup>); Scipiades, belli fulmina, &c. But אדון is not used like בעל of the possessor of a quality or attribute, and בזק fulmen rests solely on the probably corrupt text of Ez. 1<sup>14</sup>. The identity of Adoni-bezek, Jud. 1, and Adoni-zedek, Jos. 10, which was discussed by older Catholic commentators (see e.g. a Lapele), is accepted by many recent critics. § Against the hypothesis adopted above in the text, Bu. and We. contend that the original form of the name was Adoni-bezek, as in Jud.; Adoni-zedek in Jos. being an intentional differentiation in some way connected with Melchi-zedek, Gen. 14. In support of this view the fact is adduced that in Jos. the MSS. of Ε, with singular unanimity, exhibit Αδωνιβεζεκ (cf. also OS<sup>2</sup>. 26518; 1328 2317); unintentional conformation of Ε in Jos. to Jud. is less probable, it is argued, than differentiation in Η for harmonistic reasons, which also led to the omission in Jud. of the title, king of Jerusalem. But since Adoni-zedek is regularly formed and supported, by analogy, while Adoni-bezek is quite anomalous, it seems more probable that if there was any intentional change it was in the latter, not in the former.* The motive for such a change need not have been purely harmonistic; this may be one of the not infrequent perversions of proper names by a contemptuous and silly wit, such as perhaps turned חֲסִנָּה חֲסִנָּה<sup>29</sup> into חֲסִנָּה חֲסִנָּה Jos. 24<sup>30</sup>.† A third variation of this name is exhibited by Fl. Jos., ant. v. 2, 2 § 121 (on Jud. 1), Steph. Byz., Procop. Gaz. (on Jud. 1), Ⓢ<sup>18</sup>.<sup>134</sup> in Jos. 10<sup>1</sup>, viz., Ἀδωνιζεβεκ (Zeβek, Zeβέκη). Whether this is a corruption in Greek, or represents an (intermediate?) variation in Heb., can hardly be determined.

The Canaanites and the Perizzites] the Perizzites coupled with the Canaanites, v.<sup>4</sup> Gen. 13<sup>7</sup> 34<sup>30</sup> (J), and frequently in the catalogue of the peoples of Palestine, the “seven nations” of Dt. 7<sup>1</sup>. ‡ We know nothing more about them. “The land of the Perizzites and the Rephaim (giants),” Jos. 17<sup>15</sup>, § is probably a gloss or a corruption, and it is extremely precarious to infer from this collocation, taken with the absence of the name in Gen. 10, that the Perizzites belonged to a still older population which the Canaanites had supplanted and reduced to villeinage. || It may rather be questioned whether they were in reality a ‘people’ (tribe, clan) at all, or only a class of the Canaanite population, the inhabitants of peasant villages, as the name suggests.

פְּרִיזִי Dt. 3<sup>5</sup> 1 S. 6<sup>18</sup> are the inhabitants of unwalled villages, פְּרִיזִי Ez. 38<sup>11</sup>; cf. MH., Meg. 19<sup>a</sup>. It is possible that these Canaanite peasants were later imagined to have been a distinct people, and that the pronunciation פְּרִיזִי is an artificial discrimination from the appellative use. Ⓢ apparently knew nothing of this distinction; for it has Φερεξαῖοι in Dt. and Sam. also, where the later Greek translators render ἀτελῆστοι.

6. They cut off his thumbs and great toes] the mutilation doubly disabled him for fighting, and probably also disqualified him for reigning. The obvious exaggeration is no reason for questioning the genuineness of the verse,† nor for the conjecture that the number has been raised from seven,‡ nor for supplying in thought, “at different times.” § The table was a small, low stand, around which those who partook of the meal sat on the ground, or which was placed before them as they sat upon chairs or couches. || We are not, therefore, to imagine the kings actually under the table, but as gathering up from the ground, like dogs (Matt. 15<sup>27</sup>, Odyss. xvii. 309), the fragments which fell as their master ate; and we may perhaps best represent this if we think of him as sitting, like Saul (1 S. 20<sup>25</sup>), upon a divan by the wall with the table before him. ¶ — They brought him to Jerusalem, and he died there] the common, and indubitably the most natural interpretation of these words, viz. that the Israelites, as they now marched to attack Jerusalem (v. 8), carried their captive with them, is beset by great difficulty. The author of this story of the conquest tells us plainly that the invaders were unable to dislodge the Jebusites from Jerusalem (Jos. 15<sup>63</sup> Jud. 1<sup>21</sup>); — v.<sup>8</sup>, which says the opposite, is for that reason by another and a later hand. Arab. has by the side of ابهام the vulgar forms بهام and باهم. The noun is prob. fem., like other names of members of the body (Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 122. 3 c; Stade, § 310 c); Gesen. made it masc. through misconstruction of v.<sup>7</sup>; in Arab. it has both genders, the fem. prevailing. — The annexion of two genitives to one noun occurs in Heb. only when the genitives naturally go together, or form a standing phrase, as in חֲקֵה שִׁמְשֵׁם וְאֶרֶץ, Jer. 33<sup>26</sup>; אֶרֶץ וְנָחַל הַלֵּב וְרִבְשׁ, Dt. 11<sup>9</sup> Jer. 11<sup>5</sup> &c.; see also Nu. 20<sup>5</sup> Is. 22<sup>5</sup>; a striking example is Jud. 7<sup>25</sup> רֹאשׁ עֶרֶב וְזֹאב. In Arabic the constr. is more freely used. 𐤁𐤁𐤍 has here kal ta akra ta wu podaw alyaw, and it is possible that their Heb. conformed to the common construction, Ex. 29<sup>20</sup>: 𐤁𐤁𐤍 s t support 𐤁. — 7. שָׁלַח (= 𐤍𐤋𐤃) 'strip off' (skin of an animal, clothing, &c.); שָׁלַח שְׁלִיחָה (MH. שָׁלַח 'skin, hide.' Like the Arab. سُفْرَة (from سفر 'sweep off, strip off'), it was originally a round mat of leather with a drawing-string in the edge, such as is still in use among the Bedawin, which, spread out on the ground, served for a table, drawn up, as a receptacle for food; and was subsequently applied to the wooden or metal tray set upon a stand, which in town life superseded this primitive arrangement. See Lane, Arab.-Engl. Lex., p. 1371 B; Niebuhr, Arabien, 1772, p. 52; Doughty, Arabia Deserta, 1888, i. p. 148. Whether the name שָׁלַחַן was given it in Heb. because it was originally of leather (Levy, NHWb. iv. p. 560), or because it was removed, stripped off, after using, can hardly be decided. The form of the noun is anomalous; Lagarde (Bildung d. Nomina, p. 204 f.) rightly regards it as of foreign type, and (with 𐤍𐤋𐤃 𐤍𐤋𐤃 𐤍𐤋𐤃) borrowed from an Aramaic dialect. Barth (Nominalbildung, p. xxix n) explains the ä (instead of the normal ö) as the result of dissimilation, to avoid the sequence of rounded vowels u (o) ō. This is not satisfactory, because: 1, such dissimilation would more probably have affected the first vowel (giving šilhōn), as in the examples Barth himself has collected in the text; 2, the object of the dissimilation is not attained by substituting ṣ (š = o) for ʾ (ō). שָׁלוֹם requite; of divine retribution for evil deeds, Dt. 7<sup>10</sup> Jer. 25<sup>14</sup> &c. — אֱלֹהִים in the intercourse between men of different tribes, worshippers of different gods, the common name is naturally used; it is no reason for doubting the genuineness of the verse (Mey.).

8. Of the capture and destruction of Jerusalem as here narrated, there is no trace in the history. Even the Book of Joshua, which relates at large the overthrow of its king Adoni-zedek and the destruction of all the other cities of his confederacy, is significantly silent about Jerusalem (Jos. 10; cf. 12). In Jud. 19<sup>11f</sup> it is a city of the Jebusites, "where there are no Israelites," and where, therefore, a belated wayfarer hesitates to seek hospitality. The taking of Jerusalem, with its stronghold Zion, is, in fact, one of the great achievements of David (2 S. 5<sup>6-9</sup>),* the memory of which is perpetuated in the name City of David. But we are not left to inferences; the author of the history from which Jud. 1 is derived tells us explicitly that the invaders did not — could not — gain possession of Jerusalem. We are fortunate enough to have this statement in two places which it is instructive to place side by side.

Jos. 15<sup>63</sup> The Jebusites inhabiting Jerusalem, the Judahites could not dispossess; and the Jebusites dwelt with the Judahites in Jerusalem, to this day.

Jud. 1<sup>21</sup> The Jebusites inhabiting Jerusalem, the Benjamites did not dispossess; and the Jebusites dwelt with the Benjamites in Jerusalem, to this day.

These passages are identical even to the inverted order of the sentence; the only differences are indicated by the italic type. In this variation it can hardly be doubted that Jos. has preserved the original; the editor of Jud. has, as in other places in the chapter, changed could not to did not in conformity to his theory of the responsibility for this failure, and substituted Benjamin for Judah in harmony with the partition which allotted Jerusalem to the former tribe (Jos. 15<sup>8</sup> 18<sup>16. 28</sup>). For the converse changes (Stud., Be.), no reason can be assigned. The verse probably stood in the original immediately after v. 7, or perhaps v. 7. 19. 21.

* 1 S. 17<sup>54</sup>, implying that Jerusalem was already a great holy place of Yahweh, is a gross anachronism.

That this statement, in its original form as it stands in Jos., proceeds from J there is no reason to doubt; it exactly corresponds in substance and form to Jud. 1<sup>29ff.</sup> It follows that v.<sup>8</sup>, which flatly contradicts v.<sup>21</sup>, cannot be genuine; it was probably inserted by an editor, who perhaps interpreted v.<sup>7</sup>, as most commentators have done, to mean that Judah carried Adoni-bezek to Jerusalem, and supplied an express statement of what seemed to him to be necessarily inferred from v.<sup>7b</sup>. Whether this be its origin or not, the verse has no historical value.*

To harmonize v.<sup>8</sup> with v.<sup>21</sup> (Jos. 15<sup>63</sup>) and with the known facts, two principal hypotheses have been proposed: 1. They took and destroyed the lower city, but were unable to conquer the citadel (Fl. Jos., antt. v. 2, 2 § 124, cf. Procop. on v.<sup>21</sup>). Later the lower city was rebuilt, and inhabited by Judahites and Benjamites as well as Jebusites; but the latter, holding the castle, were the real masters of the city till the time of David (Cler., Schm., a Lapid., Abarb.). 2. Judah took the city and burned it as related in v.<sup>8</sup>, but, as they did not occupy it, the Jebusites soon rebuilt and fortified it so strongly that neither Benjamin, in whose territory it lay, nor Judah, whose border it threatened, was able to reconquer it. After a time, during which it was wholly Jebusite (Jud. 19<sup>11f.</sup>), Judahites and Benjamites settled as metics beside the citizens of the place, and this relation continued till David's time, when, the power passing into Israelite hands, it was reversed (cf. Aug., quaest. 7, Thdt., Ew., Ke., Be., Reuss, Ba.). By the first of these hypotheses v.<sup>8</sup> and v.<sup>21</sup> are made to refer to different things, — the lower city, the citadel; by the second, to different periods, — at the beginning of the invasion, in later times; neither is consistent with the text; if such had been the author's meaning he would have made it plain. — וַיִּלָּחֲמוּ נֹא the verbs cannot be taken as pluperf., they had fought against J. and taken it, &c. (Ki., Drus., al.), an interpretation which the syntax of Heb. tenses does not allow. — On Jerusalem and the Jebusites, see on 19<sup>10</sup>. — לְפִי חֶרֶב see below, on v.<sup>25</sup>. — וַיִּתֵּן הָעִיר שְׁלֹחַ בָּאֵשׁ 20<sup>48</sup> 2 K. 8<sup>12</sup> Ps. 74<sup>7f.</sup>; cf. וַיִּשְׁלַח אֵשׁ בְּעֵרֵי Hos. 8<sup>14</sup> Am. 1<sup>4.7.10</sup> &c. The older comm. explained the first of these constructions as an hypallage for the second (see esp. Drus.); but such an artificial figure is not natural in prose. 'Cast into the fire' will hardly do, for in all cases in O.T. the obj. is a city or building; 'set on fire' is scarcely a parallel idiom; perhaps the origin of the phrase may be 'send off, get rid of, by fire.'

9-15. Judah wages the war in all parts of its territory; the taking of Hebron and Debir; the dowry of Caleb's daughter Achsah. — 9. The verse gives us nothing more than the familiar names of the three regions into which the territory of Judah was divided by nature, and on account of this general character is suspected.* — The Highlands and the South and the Lowlands, for the whole land of Judah, resembles Jos. 10<sup>40</sup> (D) 9<sup>1</sup> (Rd) Dt. 1<sup>7</sup> cf. Jer. 17<sup>26</sup> &c. Instead of Lowland (shephelah), the author of our history uses Plain ('emeq, v.<sup>19.34</sup>). Budde conjectures with considerable probability that the verse was inserted here by the editor in place of v.<sup>19.21</sup>, when the latter verses were removed to their present position. Of the three regions named, the Highlands (RV. hill country) are the mountainous backbone of Southern Palestine, attaining its greatest elevation near Hebron; the South is the steppe region which forms the transition to the true desert; the Lowland is the coast plain including the Judæan foot-hills.

As the Dead Sea is far below the level of the Mediterranean, while the height of land is much nearer the former than the latter, the mountains of Judah fall off toward the east almost precipitously in three terraces; this is the Wilderness (סרבר) of Judah, a waterless, treeless waste, which only in spring shows a thin film of vegetation. — ננג from a root not living in Heb., but in Aram. and Syr. meaning 'dry, dry up'; the name, therefore, is probably pre-Israelite. As the Negeb was the southernmost of the natural divisions of Palestine, the name acquired the sense 'south,' just as ים sea came to mean 'west.' — השפלה sc. הארץ, the low-lying land. There was a shephelah of Israel (Jos. 11<sup>16</sup>), but the name is generally used without further definition for the southern part of the maritime plain, from Joppa to Gaza. It appears to be of Israelite origin.

10. In J the conquest of Hebron is ascribed to Caleb (Jos. 15<sup>13f</sup>). In the passage before us Judah gains the victory (v.<sup>10</sup>) and afterwards cedes the city to Caleb (v.<sup>20</sup>). Closer examination of the text shows, however, that this is the work of the editor, and that the older history from which he extracts his material agreed with Jos. 15<sup>13ff</sup>, and was, in fact, identical with the source of the latter passage. As the story now runs in Jud. 1, Judah first defeats the three giants (v.<sup>10</sup>), and then Caleb drives them out (v.<sup>20</sup>); the subject of v.<sup>11</sup> can in its present connexion only be Judah, but the context imperatively requires that it should be Caleb. The text of the older narrative may be reconstructed by the aid of the parallel in Jos. :

Jos. 15<sup>13</sup> And to Caleb the son of Jephunneh he gave a portion in the midst of the Judahites, according to the commandment of Yahweh to Joshua,* Kiriath (i.e. the city of) Arba the father of (the) Anak (giants), that is Hebron. 14 And Caleb expelled from it the three sons of Anak, Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmi, the children of Anak. 15 And he went up thence against the inhabitants of Debir, &c. 16 And Caleb said, &c.

Jud. 1<sup>20</sup> And they gave to Caleb Hebron, as Moses had bidden, and he expelled from it the three sons of Anak.

v.<sup>10</sup> [And Judah went against the Canaanites who lived in Hebron—the ancient name of Hebron was Kiriath Arba—; and they smote] Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmi. 11 And he went thence against the inhabitants of Debir, &c. 12 And Caleb said, &c.

The editor ascribes Caleb's conquest to Judah,† and makes it a victory over the Canaanites, where the older narrative spoke only of Anakim. To accomplish this, he removed v.<sup>20</sup> from the beginning of this story to the end of the account of the conquests of Judah and inserted the words enclosed in brackets (Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 4 ff.).

Hebron, 22 Rom. miles S. of Jerusalem, ‡ in the highest part of the mountains of Judah, lies in a valley running from NW. to SE. The modern city is built partly in the bottom, partly on the slope of the eastern hill.§ With the region south of it Hebron belonged to Caleb; on this clan see note below on v.<sup>15</sup>. — The name of Hebron in earlier times was Kirjath-arba] Jos. 14<sup>15</sup>, cf. The original meaning of the name is probably Tetrapolis; the peculiar construction of the numeral, which later scribes did not recognize, is evidence of its alien origin, if not of its remote antiquity. The editor has widely separated words which in J stood in immediate connexion; "he (i.e. Caleb) drove out the three giants, Sheshai, Ahiman, and Talmi"; cf. Jos. 15<sup>14</sup>. The names are of distinctively Aramaic type; Talmi is the name of an Aramæan king of Geshur, whose daughter was wife of David and mother of Absalom (2 S. 3<sup>3</sup> 13<sup>37</sup>), and inscriptions recently found at El-Ola near Teimā mention two kings of Lihhyān named Talmi; † Ahiman 1 Chr. 9<sup>17</sup>, Sheshai (Shashai) Ezr. 10<sup>40</sup>.

§ It is conceivable that Hebron (? 'confederation') is of similar origin. — It is worthy of note, though probably only an accidental coincidence, that the modern city is divided into four quarters (Rosen, ZDMG. xii. 1858, p. 487); though its recent growth makes the division less clearly marked than it was a few years ago.

So tempting a name could not fail to give rise to a multitude of speculations; the town was so called because it was the depository of the earliest records of post-diluvian history (Masius), or of the public archives of the Canaanites or Anakim (Neubauer), or as the seat of a famous library (Arias Montanus), "like those of the great cities of Babylonia and Assyria" (Sayce).* Some recent critics, like the writer last named, are inclined to draw large inferences about the civilization of Canaan from this library,† whose existence, it must be remembered, depends solely on a possible Hebrew etymology of a proper name not of Hebrew origin.

name Kirjath-sepher seems early to have attached itself to that of Sippar (Σιππαρα, Ptol., v. 18, 7), where Berossus tells us that the records of the antediluvian world were buried by Xisuthrus, the Babylonian Noah, and preserved from the waters of the flood (Müller, fr. hist. gr., ii. p. 501, Euseb., chron., ed. Schoene, i. p. 21, 22). The etymology is adopted by Bochart (Sippara = סִפְרָא), and recently by Ménant, who interprets "la ville des livres" (Babylone et la Chaldée, 1875, p. 96). See, against this derivation, Fr. Delitzsch, Paradies, p. 210, Sayce, Hibbert Lect., p. 168 n. — To connect סִפְרָא in סִפְרָא קִי with Aram. and MH. סִפְרָא, 'border, frontier,' as I formerly suggested (PAOS, Oct. 1890, p. lxx.), gives a suitable sense, Frontier-town, but the phonetic difficulties now seem to me decisive against this explanation. Another name of Debir-Kirjath-sepher, acc. to Jos. 15<sup>49</sup>, was קִרְיַת סִפְרָא; see comm. on Jos. l.c. — Kirjath-sepher is recognized by W. M. Müller (*Asien u. substitutes the more common הנה under the influence of the following ויתן. — [כי ארץ הנגב נחמני] the suff. cannot be indirect obj. (for לי) or second obj.; for if such a construction of this very common verb had been possible in Heb. we should have had other examples of it in the O.T. or M.H. In the sense, thou hast put me into the Negeb region, we might desiderate the prep., אל ארץ הנגב (cf. 2 S. 11<sup>16</sup>), or בארץ הנה; but the acc. of place is perhaps sufficient, especially if we may suppose that the original text had הנגב (Gen. 20<sup>1</sup>),* which would exclude all ambiguity; the loss of ה local before the article (haplography) is not infrequent. — גולת מים is a proper name like מִשְׁרַת מִים (מִשְׁרַת) Jos. 11<sup>8</sup> 13<sup>8</sup>; so rightly Γ Jos. 15<sup>19</sup> Γωλαθμαμ, Euseb., OS<sup>2</sup>. 245<sup>34</sup> cf. 127<sup>27</sup>, Schm. This appears more clearly in גולת החתית, גולת עליה, gullōth (pl.); the discord of number thus needlessly created has led in Jos. to mis-correction of the adj. That the name is of Canaanite (not Israelite) origin is manifest from the adj. הַחֲתִיתִּים, עלית, for which we have in Hebrew only הַחֲתִיתִּים, עליונה, e.g. הַחֲתִיתִּים Is. 7<sup>3</sup>. It is idle, therefore, to seek for it a meaning and etymology in Hebrew; גולת, 1 K. 7<sup>41.42</sup> Zech. 4<sup>2.3</sup> gives no light. The word was unknown to the ancient translators; Γ renders (in Jud.) λύτρωσιν ὕδατος, associating it with נאולה; ΛΣΤ merely guess from the context, 'watering-place, well-watered spot'; the common interpretation, 'springs' (Ra., Ki., al. mu.) has no other origin.†

Caleb and Othniel are branches of the Bene Kenaz, an Edomite tribe (Gen. 36<sup>11.15.42</sup>), closely related to Jerachmeel. ‡ These clans, separating from the main stock of their people, found new homes, Jerachmeel in the eastern Negeb, Caleb in the hill country north of it as far as Hebron. The latter, the more settled branch of the Kenizzites, eventually coalesced with their northern neighbours of Judah, and came to be reckoned one of the chief clans of that tribe (cf. Nu. 13<sup>6</sup> 34<sup>19</sup> 1 Chr. 2<sup>9.18ff.42ff.</sup>). § In David's time, however, Caleb was still distinct from Judah (1 S. 30<sup>14</sup>), and Jos. 15<sup>13</sup> cl. 14<sup>6ff.</sup> explains how Caleb came to be settled in the midst of Judah. The Calebites, as has been intimated, probably made their way into their new seats from the south; their old homes lay near the passes from that quarter, and a reminiscence of the fact seems to be preserved in the story of the spies, in which — in its original form — Caleb alone maintains the possibility of a successful invasion from that side, and receives Hebron as the reward of his faith (Nu. 13 Jos. 14<sup>6ff.</sup>).* From the emphasis of the exception it is to be inferred that Caleb alone, not Judah, entered from this direction.

16. A branch of the Kenites accompany Judah to the vicinity of Arad; then, going on to the south, join their kinsmen (Amalek). — The text has suffered badly, and the restoration is at more than one point doubtful; the general sense, however, is sufficiently certain. The Hebrew has, and the sons of . . . Kenite,† Moses' father-in-law, went up, &c. The apparent lacuna is filled in G by supplying the name, Jethro (Ex. 3<sup>1</sup>), or, better, Hobab (Nu. 10<sup>29</sup> Jud. 4<sup>11</sup>), and inserting the article, the Kenite. E. Meyer would substitute the clan name, as in all other cases in the chapter, reading, Kain,‡ the brother-in-law of Moses, went up, &c. In view of 4<sup>11</sup> it seems to me preferable to restore, and Hobab the Kenite, Moses' father-in-law, went up; see critical note. — From the Palm City] 3<sup>13</sup>. Jericho, the Palm City, Dt. 34<sup>3</sup> 2 Chr. 28<sup>15</sup>. The situation of Jericho suits 3<sup>13</sup> and the verse before us. The Palm City is named, not as the old home of the Kenites, § which Hobab had long before left to cast in his lot with Israel, || but as the point from which he set out with Judah on this campaign. The narrative represents the invaders as coming down from the north (Jerusalem, Hebron, Debir, Arad, Zephath); and v. 1<sup>4</sup> cl. v. 22<sup>2</sup> suppose that Judah and Joseph set out from the same place, probably the Jordan valley near Gilgal (2<sup>1</sup>; see also on 1<sup>22</sup>). Arad (Nu. 21<sup>1</sup> 33<sup>40</sup> Jos. 12<sup>141</sup>) is generally identified with Tell Arad, a round detached hill about 16 Eng. miles S. of Hebron.* The language of the text appears self-contradictory; the Wilderness of Judah, the barren steeps in which the mountains break down to the Dead Sea,† and the Negeb are distinct regions (see above on v.<sup>9</sup>), and it hardly seems possible that a part of the Wilderness could be described as lying in the Negeb of Arad. The suspicion is strengthened by the variation of Ḥ, which has at the pass (descent) of Arad (cf. Jos. 10<sup>11</sup>). It is very doubtful, however, whether this represents the original reading of Ḥ, as Doorninck and Budde assume.—And he went and dwelt with the Amalekites] leaving Judah, he continued southward into the desert and made his home with the nomadic Amalekites. So one of the principal recensions of Ḥ; Ḥ has with the people, which would also be possible if we might, with a slight emendation, read his people; i.e., the main body of the Kenites. The sense would be substantially the same, for the Kenites were neighbours and kinsmen of the Amalekites (1 S. 15<sup>6</sup>); see below.

וּבְנֵי קֵינִי חֶרֶן מִשֶּׁה when the gentile adj. is used of an individual, as is supposed by RV. here, the article is indispensable; it can only be dropped where the gent. adj. has become by appropriation a personal name, or where it is personified and takes the place of the eponymic ancestor, as in Gen. 36<sup>22</sup> (חֶרֶן), &c.‡ The only grammatical translation of the text as it stands is the sons of Keni (n. pr.); so the Midrash, Mechilta, Jithro 1, fol. 65<sup>a</sup> Weiss, &c. Ḥ supplies the missing name; Ḥ<sup>BN</sup> Iobop = יִרְרֹו Ex. 3<sup>1</sup>; LM ḡ Ἰωβαβ, Ḥ Ἰωβαβ = חֶבֶב Jud. 4<sup>11</sup> Nu. 10<sup>29</sup>. Stud. and Mey. infer that neither name stood in the Heb. copies before these translators; but Jethro may be the substitution of the more frequent name of Moses' father-in-law for the unfamiliar Hobab (cf. Iobop for Παγουηλ Ex. 2<sup>18</sup> in many codd.). In view of the sg. verbs in v.<sup>b</sup> § it is probable that the original reading was Hobab the Kenite, rather than the sons of Hobab (see Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 9 n., 86). Mey.'s attractive conj. וְקֵין חֶרֶן מִשֶּׁה עֵלָה is approved by Kue. (HCO<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 367) and Bu.

§ The plur. in the first verb, עָלָה, is natural conformation to the new subj. בְּנֵי קֵינִי.

(p. 9, but see p. 86); but 4<sup>11</sup> obstinately stands in the way. Even if the words משה חב הנח משה there are a gloss (Mey., Bu.), or the whole verse a late interpolation (Matthes, Kue.), the knowledge that Moses' father-in-law was a Kenite, of which there is no other intimation in the O.T., must have been derived from 1<sup>16</sup>. — [חַתָּן] = the girl's father, 19<sup>4</sup>, חַתָּן wife's mother, Dt. 27<sup>23</sup> cl. Lev. 20<sup>14</sup>; cf. Ex. 18<sup>1-2</sup> Jethro, Moses' father-in-law. So here ṬS, Mechilta, Ra., Ki., al. Many scholars render חַתָּן when used of Hobab (Jud. 4<sup>11</sup> 1<sup>16</sup>; some also Nu. 10<sup>29</sup>, where, however, a different construction is possible), brother-in-law (Thdt., Luth., Cler., Be., Ba., Ke., Cass., Reuss, Bu., Kitt., AV., RV., al. mu.). Others more indefinitely, relative (ṭ cognatus), relative by marriage (affinis, Schm.). It is not impossible that חַתָּן, like Ar. خَتَن, may have been used in the wider sense of a man's wife's near kinsmen, such as her father, or brother (Abulw., Ibn Ezra); but there is no certain instance in the O.T. of any other meaning than father-in-law, with which also the participial form better accords (cf. Stade, ZATW. vi. p. 143 n.). The passages in the Pent. which refer to Moses' marriage are conflicting and baffle analysis; cf. Ex. 2<sup>16-22</sup>; 3<sup>1</sup> 4<sup>18</sup> 18<sup>1ff</sup>; Nu. 10<sup>29</sup> Jud. 4<sup>11</sup> (1<sup>16</sup>). According to E his wife was a daughter of Jethro, a Midianite: J seems to have represented him as marrying the daughter of Hobab ben Reuel,\* a Kenite, but the redaction has introduced great confusion. — עֵיר הַחֲמִירִים on the palms of Jericho see Theophrast., hist. plant., ii. 6, 8; Strabo, xvi. p. 763; Fl. Of Jericho the name Palm City is here understood by Sifre on Num. 10<sup>29, 32</sup>, § 78, 81 (fol. 20<sup>a</sup> 21<sup>b</sup> ed. Friedm.), Ra., Thdt., Procop., and most commentators. Cler. suggested the φοινικῶν described by Diod. Sic., iii. 42, Strabo, xvi. p. 776, on the Arabian shore of the Red Sea (cf. Ptol., vi. 7, 3); see Bochart, Phaleg, ii. c. 22 (i. p. 118 ed. Others have thought of Tamar, Ez. 47<sup>19</sup> 48<sup>28</sup> (Ṭ Jericho) perhaps also 1 K. 9<sup>18</sup>, at the SE. limit of the Holy Land; probably Θαμάρ, Ptol., v. 16 8, Θαμάρ, Euseb., OS.<sup>2</sup> 210<sup>84</sup>, on the road from Jerusalem to Aila, which Rob. (BR.<sup>2</sup> ii. p. 202) would locate at Kurnub. — עֵיר seems to be named in the Egypt. king Shishak's (Shoshenq) lists of conquests in Palestine; see W. M. Müller, Asien und Europa, u. s. w., p. 168. The Onomastica put it down at 20 R. m. from Hebron, 4 m. from Malatha, which corresponds sufficiently closely with the situation of Tell Arad. From Nu. 21<sup>1</sup>, where the Israelites on their first advance from the south suffer a repulse at the hands of the king of Arad, we should rather look for Arad in the southern Negeb, near the border of the desert; but it is unsafe to lay great stress upon this.† Mey. (ZATW. i. p. 132, 137 n.) regards עֵיר in Jud. 1<sup>16</sup> as a misplaced marginal correction of צַפַּת, v. 17, and accordingly restores עֵיר in v. 17 (in conformity with Nu. 21<sup>1-3</sup>) and cancels it in v. 16; see contra, Bu., *Richt. u. — [מרבך יהודה אשר בנגב ערר] on the south of A. would be not ערר בנגב, but מנגב ערר; cf. מקדם לנן ערן Gen. 3<sup>24</sup>, מצפון לעי Jos. 8<sup>11</sup>, מים לעי Jos. 8<sup>9</sup>, &c. The various recensions of  $\mathfrak{G}$  all have ἐπὶ καταβάσεως Ἀραδ = במורר ערר; in other respects they differ considerably. Doorn. and Bu., following  $\mathfrak{G}^{\text{AL}}$  ε ε ελς εηδ ερημον 'Ιούδα τηρ οδσαν εν τφ ντφ ἐπὶ καταβάσεως Ἀραδ, and rejecting εν τφ ντφ as false doublet (in Heb. בנגב, במורר) to ἐπὶ καταβάσεως, restore מרבך ערר יהודה אשר במורר ערר. But 'Ιούδα does not belong to the original text of  $\mathfrak{G}$ ; it is lacking in  $\mathfrak{G}^{\text{MO}}$ , asterisked in  $\mathfrak{g}$ , and stands in  $\mathfrak{G}^{\text{B}}$  in a different place; presumably it was not in the Hebrew from which they translated. I propose a different solution; viz., that במורר (ἐπὶ καταβάσεως) is an old error for במרבך, as in Jos. 8<sup>24</sup>; אשר בנגב is a gloss to ערר from Nu. 21<sup>1</sup> introduced into the text in the wrong place; יהודה a natural complement to במרבך\* thus left without a genitive. It may be added in confirmation that, if Arad be rightly identified with Tell Arad, there is no steep pass (מורר) in the neighbourhood of it (see Guérin, Judée, iii. p. 182). — μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ Ἀμαληκ  $\mathfrak{G}^{\text{A}}$  † τοῦ λαοῦ is doublet, corrected after  $\mathfrak{H}$  העם; the translator read אה עמלק (Hollenberg, ZATW. i. p. 102; Mey., Kue.), or, in view of העם in  $\mathfrak{H}$ , better, אה העמלקי (Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 9 f., Kitt., Dr., TBS. p. 93). As this is not suggested by the context and cannot well have arisen by accident, while it admirably agrees with the facts (1 S. 15<sup>6</sup> &c.), it may be confidently adopted. Otherwise we might emend אה עמו. We reconstruct accordingly, וחבב הקיני חתן משה עלה מעיר החמרים את בני יהודה מרבך ערר ויילך וישב את העמלקי.

On the Kenites see Andr. Murray, Comm. de Kinacis, Hamburg, 1718<sup>o</sup>; Nöldeke, Die Amalekiter, p. 19 ff.; Wellhausen, De gentibus, etc., p. 30 ff.; Kuenen, Godsdienst, i. p. 179 ff. = Religion of Israel, i. p. 179 ff.; Stade, "Das Kainszeichen," ZATW. xiv. p. 250 ff. The Kenites are frequently associated with the Amalekites (1 S. 15<sup>6</sup> Nu. 24<sup>20-22</sup>; cf. also Gen. 36<sup>10, 12</sup>), and were in all probability a branch of that people. ‡ But while Amalek was hostile and treacherous (Dt. 25<sup>17f</sup> Ex. 17<sup>8-16</sup>), the Kenites were friendly to Israel, and according to J allied by marriage to Moses. The original sequel of Nu. 10<sup>29, 32</sup> (J) no doubt narrated that Hobab, yielding to Moses' importunity, accompanied Israel in its further migration. In the invasion Hobab consorted with Judah (Jud. 1<sup>16</sup>) and followed that tribe into the south, § but, true to his Bedawin instincts, soon roamed beyond the border into the pastures of his kinsmen of Amalek. The old relations between the Kenites and Judah were maintained, however, in the time of David (1 S. 27<sup>10</sup> cf. 30<sup>29</sup>). Later

‡ The Kenites belong to the same group with the Kennizzites (Gen. 36, cf. 15<sup>19</sup>). The common opinion that they were closely related to the Midianites is at variance with all that we know about the two peoples, and rests only on the harmony which editors and commentators have forced upon the divergent traditions of J and E. The connexion of the Rechabites (Jer. 35) with the Kenites (1 Chr. 2<sup>56</sup>) is also very doubtful.

17. Judah helps Simeon to destroy Zephath-Hormah. — According to the agreement (v.<sup>3</sup>), the allies next invade the territory of Simeon in the south of Judah. — Zephath] the name only here; see below on Hormah. — They devoted it] to destruction, razing the town and exterminating its inhabitants, to the glory of Yahweh; cf. 21<sup>11</sup> Nu. 31 Dt. 2<sup>34</sup> 3<sup>6</sup>, &c., Jos. 8<sup>24ff</sup> 10<sup>28ff</sup> 11<sup>11ff</sup>, &c., esp. 1 S. 15<sup>3ff</sup>. According to Dt. 7<sup>2</sup> 20<sup>16ff</sup> the wars with the Canaanites were always to be such holy wars of extermination. Similarly the Moabite king Mesha records in his inscription how at the bidding of Kemosh he took Nebo from Israel and put to death the whole population, "men and boys, wives and maidens, and slave girls; for to Ashtar-Kemosh I devoted it" (l. 16 f.); and again of Ataroth, "I killed all the people of the city, a fine sight (?) for Kemosh and Moab!" (l. 11 f.); cf. also 2 K. 8<sup>12</sup>.* — So the city came to be called Hormah] because it had been visited with the herem; "Devoted City." The same explanation of the name Nu. 21<sup>3</sup>. The etymology is scarcely historical; Hormah more probably signified "inviolable, sacred"; cf. Hermon. Hormah was a city of southern Judah (1 S. 30<sup>30</sup>)† towards the frontier of Edom (Jos. 15<sup>30</sup> cl. v.<sup>21</sup>), ‡ occupied by Simeonites (Jos. 19<sup>4</sup> 1 Chr. 4<sup>30</sup>). In the catalogues it regularly precedes Ziklag; cf. also Nu. 14<sup>45</sup> Dt. 1<sup>44</sup>. The data are insufficient to fix the locality, and no trace of the name has been discovered. According to our verse the native name of the place was Zephath, which Robinson would connect with the pass Naqb eş-Şafā, SE. of Kurnub, § while Rowlands and many recent writers would identify with Sebāta or Sebita, two and a half hours S. of Khalaseh. || It is, however, highly

17. [ויחרימו אותה] the Hiph. is denom. fr. חָרַם. The primary meaning of the latter is not very remote from קָדַשׁ; both denote inviolability, and, in a religious sense, withdrawal from common use or contact. But in the further development of this idea in Heb. they go in opposite directions: קָדַשׁ applies to things which God appropriates to himself because he chooses them for his pleasure or service; חָרַם to things which he prohibits to men because he hates them with peculiar hatred. Both are inviolable: the first are holy, and it is sacrilege to pervert them to profane uses; the second are also sacrosanct, and whatever touches them contracts the same character and is doomed to the same fate. They thus represent opposite sides of the common idea of taboo (on which see Fraser, Enc. Brit.<sup>9</sup>. xxiii. p. 15 ff.). The root קָדַשׁ is found only in the North Semitic languages; חָרַם in them all, cf. Ar. حَرَّمَ, حَرَام, حَرَام; Nabat. חָרַם, 'inviolable,' Euting 28f. and p. 28; Palmyr., de Vogüé, 35; Himyar., Halévy, 50, 176<sub>2</sub>, &c.* — [ויקרא את שם העיר חרמה] the use of the 3 sg. m. with inherent indef. subj. (miscalled 'impersonal') is not infrequent in this verb; 2 S. 21<sup>6</sup> Gen. 11<sup>9</sup> 16<sup>14</sup> 19<sup>22</sup>, Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 144, 3 a. — From Nu. 21<sup>1-3</sup> it would appear that the older native name of Hormah was Arad, and that, with the neighbouring Canaanite cities, it was destroyed by Israel during their earlier wanderings in revenge for hostile acts of its king; whence its name Hormah. Critics who do not, like Cass., Ba., assume that the city was twice destroyed and renamed, explain Nu. 21<sup>3</sup> as narrating by anticipation the destruction of the place by Judah and Simeon, Jud. 1<sup>17</sup> (Stud., Kn., Ew., Be., We., Mey., Di.). On this hypothesis it must be assumed, further, that Zephath and Arad (both equivalent to Hormah) designate the same place, which creates a fresh difficulty.† A more probable solution is, that the words מִלֵּךְ עָרָר in Nu. 21<sup>1</sup> are an interpolation; ‡ they disturb the structure of the verse and make serious difficulty with v.<sup>3</sup>. If the words are omitted, מָקוֹם (v. 3) is the region in which the destroyed cities stood, which also better suits Nu. 14<sup>45</sup> Dt. 1<sup>44</sup> (from Seir to Hormah). It is then not necessary to connect Nu. 21<sup>1-3</sup> with Jud. 1<sup>17</sup> in any way; they contain two explanations of the name Hormah. — The identifications proposed by Rob. and Rowlands are founded upon Nu. 21<sup>1-3</sup>, both assuming that the attack on the Canaanites proceeded from Kadesh; eṣ-Ṣafā is a pass leading into the mountains from 'Ain el-Weibeh (Robinson's Kadesh); Sebaita lies north of 'Ain Qudēs (Rowlands' Kadesh); neither is anywhere near Tell Arad. — On Simeon,

18, 19. The Coast Plain.—The two verses flatly contradict each other; v.<sup>18</sup> tells us that Judah captured the three principal cities of the plain, Gaza in the south, Ashkelon in the middle, and Ekron in the north, with their territory. That is in effect the whole region occupied in latter times by the Philistine confederacy; v.<sup>19</sup> says that Judah, with the help of Yahweh, got possession of the mountainous interior, but was unable to conquer the lowlands, where the formidable war-chariots of the natives could operate. This agrees with 3<sup>3</sup> Jos. 13<sup>3</sup>, where Philistia, like Phœnicia and Coele-Syria, is represented as being a part of Canaan which Israel did not conquer.* The hypothesis that Judah took these cities in the first onset, but was unable to maintain its hold on the plain,† does not relieve the difficulty in our verses; a writer who meant that must have expressed himself quite otherwise in v.<sup>19</sup>. The phraseology of v.<sup>18</sup> is also strikingly different from that of the rest of the chapter. Nothing remains but to pronounce v.<sup>18</sup> an editorial addition of the same stamp as v.<sup>8</sup> and of equally unhistorical character. ‡ — 19. Yahweh was with Judah] v.<sup>22</sup>. The Highlands] see above, on v. 9. The position of the verse suggests the question whether the Judæan Negeb is tacitly included, so that Highlands as a designatio a potiori has here a wider extension; § or whether the Negeb, occupied by Caleb, Othniel, Kain, and Simeon, is distinguished from the possessions of Judah proper. || Meyer, however, with good reason, restores v.<sup>19. 21</sup> to their natural place after v.<sup>7</sup>. ¶ — They were unable to expel, &c.] see critical note. — The Plain] is here as in v.<sup>34</sup>, the coast plain west of Judah, in which the cities named in v.<sup>18</sup> stood.** Others †† take the word ('emeq) collectively for the wide valleys in the mountains of Judah, such as the Emeq Rephaim near Jerusalem

18. [וילכר יהודה] 𐤀 𐤀 𐤁 harmonizing, οὐκ ἐκκληρονομήσεν,† which Ziegler (cf. Cler.) and Doorn. accept, explaining וילכר 𐤀 as transcriptional error for 𐤀. ולא לכו. But if v. 19 had originally been prefaced by such a statement, it would probably have been differently introduced (e.g. 𐤀 כי יהיה את יהודה וג'); observe also לכו (v. 8. 12. 13), and esp. גבורה (as 1 S. 7<sup>14</sup> and often) instead of בנותיה, elsewhere throughout the chapter.‡ Bu. (Richt. u. Sam., p. 6 n.) supposes that v. 18, except the first two words, was originally a gloss to העמק v. 19; the contradictory beginnings of the verse in 𐤀 and 𐤀 proceed from two different scribes who independently introduced the gloss into the text. The statements of Fl. Jos., antl. v. 2, 4 § 128 and v. 3, 1 § 177, are manifestly derived from our text, but agree neither with it nor with each other. — On the cities named in v. 18 see DB<sup>2</sup>; on Gaza also below on 16<sup>1</sup>, on Ashkelon, on 14<sup>19</sup>. — 19. [לא להוריש] that this mode of expression is abstractly possible must perhaps be admitted, though there is no complete parallel; cf. Am. 6<sup>10</sup>, Dr. 3 § 202, 2; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 114 n. 2. But in the context the impersonal, it was impossible to expel, is less suitable than he (Judah) was unable to expel. Jos. 15<sup>63</sup> 17<sup>12</sup> make it most probable that the author wrote לא יכל להוריש; cf. also 𐤀 𐤀 𐤀; § the verb יכל was cancelled by R or a scribe on dogmatic grounds. 𐤀 relieves the difficulty by premising "after they had sinned" (cf. 27. 10ff.); an anonymous commentator in Cat. ‡ The rendering of לכו by ἐκκληρονομήσεν points to a different hand from the translator of the rest of the chapter (cf. v. 12. 13), and perhaps justifies the inference that v. 18 (which from its contents cannot have been inserted by the editor of Jud. 1) was interpolated after the Greek version was made.

§ These versions could, however, scarcely render otherwise, and 𐤀 and 𐤀, at least, probably had our text; 𐤀 translates, did not destroy.

In connexion with this conjecture Budde surmises that in the original context of J a short account of the operations against Ai (Jos. 8) preceded v.<sup>23</sup>. — 23. In Jos. 16<sup>2</sup> the two seem to be distinguished ("from Bethel to Luz"), and it has been inferred from the passages in Gen. also that the Israelite sanctuary, Bethel, was at a little distance from the old Canaanite city, Luz; ‡ the conclusion is, however, in both cases precarious. In JE (Gen. 28) the origin of the name Bethel is connected with the vision which Jacob had there in his flight from the wrath of Esau, and the sacred stone (βαίτυλος) which he set up on the spot (v.<sup>22</sup>); in P (Gen. 35<sup>9-15</sup>) with a theophany on the same spot as he returned from Paddan Aram. But instead of these clumsy alterations the simple and only natural remedy was to drop the words altogether.* The origin of the variant in Ⓢ is much more probably to be explained by the accidental corruption of יהוה to יהורה in the copy from which the translation was made. In the story of the taking of Bethel as narrated in v. 23-26 there is no reference to a leader such as Joshua, and hardly room for such a one. — 23. In Jos. 16<sup>2</sup> לוז is perh. merely a gloss to ביתאל, “from Bethel-Luz” (Di. in loc.); † it is hardly likely that in defining a long boundary by four or five points two places would be named which are so near to each other as to be ordinarily identified. The inference from Gen. 28<sup>19</sup> (Jacob did not pass the night in the Canaanite town) is only really cogent upon the assumption of the strictly historical character of the narrative. In the partition of the land Bethel is allotted to Benjamin (Jos. 18<sup>22</sup> cf. Neh. 11<sup>31</sup>), but the course of the boundary (Jos. 18<sup>13</sup> cf. 16<sup>1f</sup>) seems to leave it in the territory of Ephraim; see comm. on Jos. 18. from it the Plain of Megiddo (Zech. 12<sup>11</sup> 2 Chr. 35<sup>22</sup>), as the Kishon is called the River of Megiddo (Jud. 5<sup>19</sup>). Megiddo was evidently a place of capital strategic importance, and is named in both Egyptian and Assyrian inscriptions. In later times the name completely disappears; neither Josephus nor Eusebius and Jerome are acquainted with it. Robinson * established, to a high degree of probability, that Megiddo occupied the site of the Legio of the Onomastica, the modern Leggūn, at the point where the main road from the coast, having crossed the range of hills which extending to the SE. connects Carmel with Samaria, emerges into the Great Plain. Its position must always have made it the key to the western end of the plain as Beth-shean was to its eastern end.† — The Canaanites resolved to remain in that region] stubbornly maintained their hold upon it. — 28. When Israel became strong enough] the subjugation of these cities appears to have been the work of David; their power had doubtless been greatly weakened by the struggle with the Philistines, who, at the beginning of Saul's reign, or shortly after, had probably conquered the rest of them as we know they did Beth-shean. They were all subject to Solomon, 1 K. 4<sup>11f.</sup> — They impressed the Canaanites in the working gangs] employed on public works (1 K. 9<sup>20f.</sup>). From the earliest times to the days of the Suez canal, the corvée has been in the East the means by which great public works have been executed. According to their traditions, the Israelites had been set to such labour in Egypt; Solomon employed it on a large scale in his buildings and fortifications, and, in spite of 1 K. 9<sup>22</sup>, it bore heavily not only upon aliens but on Israelites (1 K. 5<sup>13f.</sup> 12<sup>4. 10. 18</sup>). Megiddo and Gezer (v.<sup>20</sup>) were fortified by him by impressed labour, doubtless largely of their own Canaanite inhabitants (1 K. 9<sup>15</sup>). — But by no means expelled them] the population of these cities continued to be largely Canaanite; Beth-shean, in particular, was, even to the latest times, more foreign than Israelite.

The identification with Leggūn is due to Eshtori Parchi (1322; fol. 67<sup>b</sup>, Zunz, in Asher's Benj. of Tudela, ii. p. 433); in modern times it seems to have been first suggested in an anonymous review of Raumer's Palaestina in the Münch. gelehrt. Anzeigen, Dec. 1836, p. 920 (Rob.). Legio (Λεγεων) is freq. mentioned in the Onomastica; as the intersection of several roads it is used as the base from which the distance of a number of places is reckoned; under the name Leggūn it is often named in the Arab geographers (Le Strange, Palestine, &c., p. 492 f.). Tell el-Mutesellim (Thomson, Land and Book<sup>2</sup>, ii. p. 214; Guérin, Samarie, ii. p. 237) may have been the citadel of Megiddo, as Tell el-Hişn was of Beth-shean. Conder (PEF. Statements, 1877, p. 13 ff., cf. 190-192; SWP. Memoirs, ii. p. 90 ff.) would put Megiddo at Khurbet el-Mugédida', in the valley 3 m. SW. of Beth-shean; the situation is impossible. Others (so Spruner-Sieglin, Atlas) identify it with el-Mugeidil, an hour and a quarter SW. of Nazareth. — ולא יכלו... להוריש Jos. 17<sup>12</sup> [ולא הכנעני וג'] not began (GL as usually), nor consented, agreed (Ba., Cass., after older scholars). this "heathen district" (Galilee of the Gentiles) was probably for many centuries not Israelite.

The tribes of Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali are named. The omission of Issachar is not easily accounted for, since the Song of Deborah (ch. 5) shows that in early times it was a prominent tribe and had much to suffer from the Canaanites (cf. also Gen. 49<sup>14f</sup>). It is hardly likely that it is included under Joseph,* more probably it has been omitted, through accident or design, in the abridgment of the chapter.

would restore Ahlab, or Helbah, which is perhaps a variant of the same name, before Achzib; it was probably on the coast between Achzib and Sarepta. Aphik and Rehob are found together in the catalogue of cities of Asher, Jos. 19<sup>30</sup>; they were apparently further inland. — 32. The Asherites settled among the inhabitants of the land] the words clearly express the difference between the situation in this part of the land and that south of the Great Plain. In the latter region the conquest was incomplete, but the Israelites were, at least in the mountains, the predominant element in the population; in the north there was no conquest at all, and Asher and Naphtali settled among the native inhabitants as best they could. — For they did not drive them out] we may with confidence assume that the author of the older history wrote, as elsewhere, could not. — 33. Naphtali] settled in the eastern half of Upper Galilee, having Zebulun and Issachar on the south and Asher on the west. — Beth-shemesh] Jos. 19<sup>38</sup>; not identified. — Beth-anath] coupled with Beth-shemesh (Jos. From the predominance of the alien element in this region it was called the Foreign District (Gelil ha-goyīm, Galilee of the Gentiles, Is. 8<sup>23</sup> = AV. 9<sup>1</sup>), or shortly, the District (Gelil, Galilee; 1 K. 9<sup>11</sup> 2 K. 15<sup>29</sup>). Sepphoris (Meg. 6<sup>a</sup>). The tradition of the names is not such as to inspire unqualified confidence. In Jos. 19<sup>15</sup> we find קָשָׁר וְהַלֵּל (Ἐῤῥά Καρὰθ), in 21<sup>84</sup> קִרְיָהּ is prob. another variant of the same name; Jer. Meg. i. 1 identifies קָשָׁר with קִשְׁרִיָּה (see Neubauer, Géog. du Talm., p. 189). — For נְהֵלֵל here Ἐῤῥά has Δωμάνα, i.e. רִמְנָה Jos. 21<sup>85</sup>. — [וְהוֹלִין] see Frensdorff, *Mass. Ἐῤῥά ἀπὸ Λεβ, ἀπὸ Ἀλεβ) seems imperative. The order of enumeration (restoring עָנֹו v. 30) is from N. to S. An inscription of Sennacherib,* which recites his successes in Phoenicia, names in order, Sidon, Bit-Zi-it-ti (בִּית זִית), Sarepta, Maḡalliba, Uṣu-u, † Achzib, Acco. Fr. Europa*, p. 194, n.) conj. that מַחְלָב was the original name in the O.T. also. This does not commend itself; but it is altogether probable that Aḡlab, Ḥelbah, and Maḡalliba are variations of the same name, ‡ the meaning remaining the same. If this be so, we may venture to conjecture that it was the old name of the Promontorium album of Pliny, the modern Rās el-Abyaḍ, midway between Tyre and Achzib; cf. Plin., n. h., v. 75, Ptolemais, quae quondam Accae . . . Ecdippa, promunturium Album, Tyros. — Many identify Aḡlab with the Gush Ḥalab of the Talmuds, the Γισχάλα of Josephus (b. j., ii. 20, 6; iv. 2, 1 ff.; vit., 10, &c.), now el-Ḡish, NW. of Safed; but this, although in the Talmud ascribed to Asher (Menachoth, 85<sup>b</sup>, cf. Sifre, Dt. § 355, fol. 148<sup>a</sup> ed. Friedm.), is much too far inland for our context, and, indeed, for the boundaries of Asher. § Still more remote is חָלָב (Aleppo), or הַלְבָּה, prob. It is freq. mentioned by Arab. Geographers (Le Strange, p. 463). Eshtori Parchi observes that Gush Ḥalab is almost a day's journey from Acco; he can explain its belonging to Asher only by the fact that the boundaries of the tribes overlapped (fol. 67<sup>a</sup>).

|| Aphaka in the Lebanon is probably intended in Jos. 13<sup>4</sup>; see J. D. Mich., Suppl., p. 114; cf. Budde, Urgeschichte, p. 350.

The Rehob of our text (and Jos. 19<sup>80</sup>) cannot be the same as Beth-rehob near Dan (Jud 18<sup>28</sup>). It is very likely Rehob in Asher that is meant in the Egyptian lists cited by Müller, Asien u. Europa, p. 153; see his note there. It seems probable from the order in Jos. 19<sup>29, 30</sup>, and from the fact that in other catalogues of the towns on the Phoenician seaboard the names nowhere occur, that Aphik and Rehob were not on the coast, but in the interior. The omission of Tyre from this list is significant. — The name Asher appears in the Egyptian inscriptions of Seti and Ramses II.* among the peoples with whom those kings waged war in northwestern Palestine, in the same region where the Israelite tribe Asher is located by the O.T.; see W. M. Müller, Asien u. Europa, p. 236 ff.† Like the names Joseph-el and Jacob-el (above, p. 41), this fact opens large questions about the settlement of the Israelites in Palestine, upon which we cannot enter here. — [בית ענף] occurs among the conquests of Seti and Ramses II. (Müller, op. cit., p. 195, 220), with divine determinative, as was observed by De Rouge in 1852 (Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscr., xx. 2, 1861, p. 181). There is another Aināta on the eastern slope of the Lebanon not far from the Bisherreh cedars (Burton, Unexplored Syria, ii. 138 f.; Thomson, Land and Book<sup>2</sup>, Lebanon, &c., p. 272, 313; Bäd<sup>3</sup>, p. 350). 34, 35. Dan is forced back into the mountains. — The verses differ strikingly from the rest of the chapter in the use of the name Amorite instead of Canaanite. In the Hexateuch the former is characteristic of E (and D), the latter of J.‡ Verse <sup>36</sup>, which shares this peculiarity, is clearly fragmentary and misplaced. For these reasons, which he fortifies by other peculiarities of expression in the verse, Meyer separates v. <sup>34-36</sup> as the work of another hand.§ Budde has shown, however, || that, whatever explanation we may give of the substitution of Amorites for Canaanites, v. <sup>34f.</sup> are probably derived from the same source and context as the rest of the chapter. — Dan] first tried to get a foothold on the southwest of Ephraim. 34. As v.<sup>33</sup>, in any case, is not the original sequel of v.<sup>34f</sup>, it is unsafe to infer much from their present juxtaposition. Moreover, in v.<sup>33</sup> the text is corrupt precisely in the critical words; for Amorites we must read Edomites (Hollenb., Bu., Kitt.). The form of v.<sup>34f</sup> corresponds as closely to the rest of the chapter as the different situation admits, and the coincidences in phraseology become more significant against the other differences; observe עמק in contrast to הר v.<sup>34</sup> (v.<sup>19</sup>), ויואל לשבח v.<sup>35</sup> (v.<sup>27</sup> Jos. 17<sup>12</sup>), בית יוסף v.<sup>35</sup> (v.<sup>22.23</sup>), ויהיו למס v.<sup>35</sup> (v.<sup>30.33</sup> Jos. 16<sup>10</sup>); cf. v.<sup>35b</sup> with v.<sup>28a</sup>, v.<sup>34b</sup> with v.<sup>19b</sup> (Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 16). The contents of the verse fully agree with what we know of the fortunes of Dan. There remains only the name Amorite, which can hardly be allowed to outweigh these evidences of unity of origin. The change may have been made by an editor; or the corruption in v.<sup>33</sup> may have worked back into the preceding verses, with which that was thought to be closely connected. — ויחצו לחץ lit. corresponding to ثعلب, as well as شعل, שעל. Aq. Symm. Theod. Σαλαβειν, which, corrupted to Θαλαβειν, has found its way as a doublet into 5<sup>B</sup>. The other variations of 5 in this verse are particularly interesting. 5 adds ἐπὶ τὸν Ἀμορραῖον. Cf. ותעז ירו על 3<sup>10</sup> 6<sup>2</sup>. — Doorn. (p. 11 f.) regards 33<sup>b</sup> 35<sup>b</sup> as patriotic interpolations (cf. 5 v.<sup>30.31</sup>); the Israelites cannot have thus subjected the more numerous and stronger native population. These notices, however, describe the situation at a later time, after the consolidation of the Israelite power in Canaan.

36. The Edomite frontier. — The verse has no connexion with the preceding. The Pass of Akrabbim was on the southern or southeastern frontier of Judah, toward Edom (Nu. 34<sup>3f</sup>. Jos. 15<sup>1-4</sup>) ; Sela, an Edomite stronghold (2 K. 14<sup>7</sup>) which lay still further east. The Hebrew text has the boundary of the Amorites, which could only be understood of the old southern boundary of their land, which thus became the limit of the Israelite conquests. This would, however, be a singularly roundabout way of making a plain statement. It is therefore in the highest degree probable that, following certain recensions of G, we should restore, the boundary of the Edomites was, &c.* This description of the southern boundary has no connexion with the seats of Dan in the West ; it would stand appropriately after v.<sup>16</sup> (the Kenites) or v.<sup>17</sup> (Sim-eon), but from the form of v.<sup>36</sup> it may be doubted whether this was its original place. I am inclined to conjecture that the source from which the material of Jud. 1 was derived contained a brief description of the frontier between Israel and its neighbours on different sides, of which only this fragment has been preserved. — The Edomites] the nearest kinsmen of the Israelites and their neighbours on the SE. — The Akrabbim Pass] Scorpion Pass. Sela (The Cliff) is commonly identified with the later capital of the Nabataeans, Petra ; but this identification, in itself dubious, ‡ is here impossible. The boundary between Judah and Edom can never have run from Naqb eṣ-Ṣafa to Wady Mūsā. We require a point near the southern end of the Dead Sea, which equally well suits 2 K. 14<sup>7</sup> Is. 16<sup>1</sup>. The emendation is easy and seems necessary. But apart from the fact that this is no pass, it falls with Rob.'s false identification of Kadesh ('Ain el-Weibeh). The description of the boundary (Nu. 34<sup>3f</sup>. Jos. 15<sup>1-4</sup>) requires a pass on a line between the southern end of the Dead Sea and Kadesh ('Ain Qudeis). The conditions are best fulfilled by Naqb eṣ-Ṣafā; Naqb ibn Mār (Wilson, DB<sup>2</sup>, s. v.) is also possible. W. az-Zuweireh (De Saulcy) is much too far north. — [הסלע] is understood as the name of the Edomite capital, Petra, by Procop., Vatab., Cler., Rosenm., Ew. (GVI, i. p. 338); Stud., Be., Cass., Oett., al. The equivalence of the names is seductive, but the identification has no more substantial basis. The passages in which Sela occurs (Jud. 1<sup>33</sup> 2 K. 14<sup>7</sup> Is. 16<sup>1</sup>)* all seem to point to a cliff near the southern end of the Dead Sea; we may perhaps conjecture that it was the modern eṣ-Ṣāfiēh, a bare and dazzlingly white sandstone promontory a thousand feet high.†

This change is signalized by the removal of the Angel of Yahweh,* his presence manifested in oracle and theophany, from Gilgal to the new holy place, which, upon his appearance there, is consecrated by sacrifice (v.<sup>5b</sup>). The transfer of the religious centre to Bethel marks the end of the period of invasion, as the preceding period of migration ended with the encampment at Gilgal (Jos. 5<sup>10-12</sup>). What stands between (v.<sup>1b-5a</sup>) is in substance and form strikingly different from ch. I, and bears the stamp of the school of Hebrew historiography which, for lack of a more suitable general name, we call Deuteronomic.† It does not exactly agree with 2<sup>11ff</sup>, however, still less with 2<sup>23</sup> 3<sup>1-3</sup>, and on external grounds also cannot be ascribed to the author of that Introduction to the Book of Judges. It doubtless comes from the hand of the editor who introduced ch. I in this place.‡

This is perhaps preserved in the conflated text of G, which beside ἐπὶ τὸν κλαυθμῶνα (Bochim) has and to Bethel and to the house of Israel.† Bochim ("Weepers") may then be connected with Allon Bacuth ("Weeping Tree") below Bethel (Gen. 35<sup>8</sup>; see on v.<sup>5</sup>). Since, according to Jos. 18<sup>1</sup> 19<sup>51</sup>, the tabernacle was at Shiloh, others think that Bochim must have been near that sanctuary:‡ The original sequel of v.<sup>1a</sup> was <sup>5b</sup>, "and they sacrificed there to Yahweh"; see below, ad loc. — 1<sup>b</sup>. I brought you up from Egypt] so the context and the following tenses require; ~~¶~~ I will bring you up. It is preferable, therefore, to regard v. 3 as referring to a previous warning such as Jos. 23<sup>13</sup> Nu. 33<sup>55</sup>, ‡ from which the peculiar expression in v. 3<sup>b</sup> is perhaps derived. Older scholars regarded 2<sup>1-5</sup> as a fragment having no connexion with either what precedes or what follows (Ziegler, Theol. Abhandl., i. 1791, p. 295); or, misled by the similarity in tone between 2<sup>1b-5a</sup> and 2<sup>6-3<sup>o</sup></sup>, as a piece taken from some other context and set here as a prelude, or text, to the following (Stud.). probably connected with an older or discrepant division of the verses.* — [אעלה] the versions have supplied various beginnings for the sentence which do not meet the difficulty. Stud. and Be. would insert אמרהי (I proposed to bring you up, &c.; cf. Ra.); Böttch. (Neue exeget. Krit. Aehrenlese, p. 74) conjectured וְגַם אֶעֱלֶה (future), cf. Ex. 3<sup>16f</sup>. Gen. 50<sup>24</sup>, which Doorn. improves upon by reading וְאֶעֱלֶה for אֶעֱלֶה. This gives us an unimpeachable text. The speech of the angel is, however, a cento of quotations and reminiscences, and it is at least possible that the author here copied Ex. 3<sup>17a</sup> without correcting the tense. Attempts to explain אֶעֱלֶה grammatically (Roorda, § 367; Dr.<sup>8</sup> § 27 γ; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 107 1 a; Ba., al.) are forced, and do not account for the following ואביא. — [לא אפר בריחי] make of no effect, annul, 1 K. 15<sup>19</sup>; in religious sense common in Jer. The "singular antithesis," make no terms . . . but pull down their altars, at which Doorn. stumbles, stands just so in Ex. 34<sup>12.13</sup>. — [לא הכרתו בריח] the phrase כרת בנית (usually with עם or אה, here with ל, as in 1 S. 11<sup>1</sup>, 'prescribe terms to') apparently originated in the rite described in Jer. 34<sup>18f</sup>, cf. Gen. 15<sup>10</sup>. See the parallels collected by Bochart, Hierozoicon, l. ii. c. 33 (i. p. 332 ff. ed. Rosenm.), Di. in BL. s. v., "Bund"; and on the probable significance of the rite, W. R. In view of the apparent reference to this threat, it is probably best to correct Jud. to conform to Nu. Whether hasty abridgment or transcriptional accident has produced the present text is uncertain. The ancient versions seem to have read or guessed לצרים or לצידים, cf. אֲרֹרָה אֹהֶבֶם. Nu. 33<sup>55b</sup>; so Θ ἐἰς συστοχάς I in angustias, in pressura, ℣ hostes, Ⲭ למעיקין Stud., Be., Doorn. would emend accordingly; but the reading of these verss. has the marks of a bad (though natural and old) conjecture; the idea thus conveyed is too self-evident to suit the emphatic context; moreover, צר is never found in a similar connexion. Abulw., connecting צידים with צור 'hunt,' interpreted 'snares, traps,' and this explanation has been recently revived by Fr. Delitzsch, Hebr. Lang., p. 29 f., Prolegomena, p. 75 f., comparing Assyrian

* The former opinion was maintained by Morinus and many older scholars (see Ges., Lehrgebäude, p. 124); the theory has lately been revived by Graetz and controverted by Sidon; see Theol. Jahresbericht, iv. p. 18; Graetz' rejoinder, Monatsschrift. f. G. u. W. d. Judenthums, 1887, p. 193-200.

Another comparatively simple solution would be to pronounce לְצוּרִים (cf. צֹרֶה Ex. 21<sup>18</sup>, esp. 1 S. 24<sup>12</sup>), 'huntsmen, trappers.' — [כְּזִים] the form of this n. pr. loci (act. ptc.) strengthens the suspicion that the pronunciation has been deflected in favour of the etymology.

II. 6-XVI. 31. THE HISTORY OF ISRAEL IN CANAAN IN THE DAYS OF THE JUDGES.

II. 6-III. 6. Introduction; the religious pragmatism of the history.

After the great assembly and solemn covenant at Shechem (Jos. 24<sup>1-27</sup>), Joshua sends the people away to occupy the lands which have been allotted to them (2<sup>6</sup>). Israel continues faithful to Yahweh as long as Joshua and the survivors of his generation live, but after they have passed away, and a new generation comes up who have not seen the great deliverances and victories of their God, the heathenizing of Israel begins (v. 7-10). The people neglect Yahweh for the worship of the Baals and Astartes, the gods of Canaan (v. 11-13). Yahweh visits his anger upon them by the hand of their foes and they are brought into great straits (v. 14<sup>f</sup>). Anon, moved by their groans under foreign tyranny, he raises up champions who deliver them; but they do not even then abandon the worship of other gods, and the death of the judge is always a signal for a worse relapse into heathenism (v. 16-19). In indignation at this incurable unfaithfulness, Yahweh vows that he will not complete the expulsion of the peoples of the land, but will leave them to tempt Israel. The Israelites intermarry with their neighbours and adopt their religion (2<sup>20-36</sup>).

This general introduction contains an interpretation and judgement of the history of the whole period, which is represented as "an almost rhythmical alternation of idolatry and subjugation, return to Yahweh and liberation." * The motives out of which it is constructed reappear in the particular introduction to the story of each of the Judges. A typical example is 3<sup>12-15</sup>: The Israelites again did what displeased Yahweh, and Yahweh gave Eglon, king of Moab, power over Israel. . . . And the Israelites served

Eglon, king of Moab, eighteen years. And the Israelites cried unto Yahweh, and he raised them up a deliverer, Ehud ben Gera, the Benjamite, &c. Compare 3<sup>7-11</sup> (Othniel), 4<sup>1-3</sup> (Deborah), 13<sup>1</sup> (Samson). In 6<sup>1-6. 7-10</sup> (Gideon) and 10<sup>6-16</sup> (Jephthah) the theme is developed at greater length, the latter passage being closely parallel to 2<sup>6-3<sup>6</sup></sup>. It is clear from the prominence given to the pragmatism that the author's aim was moral and religious rather than purely historical; the lesson of the history is for him the chief thing in the history.* He has, however, contented himself with emphasizing the lesson in this way, and has hardly touched the stories themselves. See further on 3<sup>7ff.</sup>

The introduction, 2<sup>6-3<sup>6</sup></sup>, is not homogeneous. Ch. 2<sup>6-10</sup> is the transition from the history of the conquest under Joshua to that of the Judges, and is found, with slight variations, in Jos. 24<sup>28-31</sup> also.† In v. 11-22 two very similar accounts have been intimately combined; while in 2<sup>23</sup> 3<sup>1-6</sup> fragments of an independent narrative (J) also enter into the composition.

On the analysis of 2<sup>6-3<sup>6</sup></sup> see Bertheau<sup>2</sup>, p. viii. f., xix. f., 55 ff., esp. 61 f.; Budde, Richt. u. Sam., p. 92-94, 155 ff.; E. Meyer, ZATW. i. p. 144 f.; Kuenen, HCO<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 338 ff.; Kittel, Stud. u. Krit., 1892, p. 51 ff., GdH. i. 2. p. 5 f. Although Kuenen, after setting aside v. 13. 17 as interpolations, finds no ground for challenging the unity of 2<sup>11-23</sup>, which he ascribes as a whole to the Deuteronomic author, the composite character of the passage is recognized by most recent critics. It is evident in the duplication of almost every clause; cf. v. 12 with v. 13; v. 14a (he gave them into the power of spoilers) with v. 14b (he sold them into the power of their enemies); v. 16f. with v. 18f. The character of these doublets points to composition (Bu.), rather than to editorial expansion or interpolation. We can separate two parallel accounts, each of which is almost completely preserved; the two are, however, in thought and phrase so much alike, and the style of the redactor so similar to that of both, that the analysis is difficult and doubtful. To one of them (E) may be assigned 2<sup>6. 8-10. 13. 14a. 16. 17. 20. 21</sup>. This is the principal narrative and is intact, lacking only perhaps some such words as, "And the Israelites cried unto Yahweh" (cf. 3<sup>15</sup>), before 2<sup>16</sup>. To the other belong 2<sup>7. 12. 14b. 15. 18. 19</sup>, in which the nexus between v. 7 and v. 12 is wanting, having been supplanted by the words of E. Verse<sup>11</sup> is an addition by the last editor (R).* The second of these exhibits throughout the peculiarities of conception and expression which we find in the Deuteronomic strata of the Hexateuch and the Deuteronomic writers in the Book of Kings, as well as in the introductions to the stories of the several Judges, and may be confidently ascribed to the same school. For brevity, and without attempting to define its relation to the cognate parts of Dt. and Jos., this element in the book will henceforth be designated by the signature D (Deuteronomic author of Judges). With general agreement between the introductions of E and D, there are slight differences of representation which should not be overlooked. In E the sin of Israel is the worship of the Baals and Astartes, the gods of Palestine (2<sup>18</sup>); in D the adoption of the religion of the surrounding nations (v.<sup>12</sup> cf. 10<sup>6</sup>). In E they are delivered into the hand of plunderers (סֹבְרִים v.<sup>14a</sup>); in D sold into the power of the enemies who surround them (v.<sup>14b. 15</sup>), with which compare 3<sup>12</sup> (Moab), 6 ff. (Midian), 10<sup>6ff.</sup> (Ammon), 13 ff. (Philistines). In E they do not obey their judges but persist in apostasy (v.<sup>17</sup>), in consequence of which Yahweh resolves not to drive out any more of the nations which Joshua left unsubdued (v. 20. 21); in D a reform under each of the judges is followed at his death by a worse relapse (v.<sup>18. 19</sup>). In 2<sup>23</sup>–3<sup>2</sup> fragments of a third source are found; † ch. 2<sup>23a</sup> 3<sup>2</sup> give an altogether different explanation of the incompleteness of the conquest from 2<sup>21</sup> 3<sup>1a. 4</sup>, and are ascribed by Mey. and Bu. (cf. Kitt.) to the author of ch. 1 (J). ‡ The list of nations, 3<sup>8</sup>, is thought by these scholars to be derived from the same source, but this seems to me less probable; 2<sup>23a</sup> 3<sup>2</sup> appear to me to refer backward to ch. 1, and neither to require nor admit after them a list like 3<sup>8</sup>. This list, which corresponds to Jos. 13<sup>2ff.</sup> rather than to Jud. 1, together with 3<sup>1a</sup>, I am inclined to attribute to E, whose narrative would then run: 2<sup>20. 21</sup> 3<sup>1a. 3. 4</sup>; 3<sup>5. 6</sup> bear the stamp of Rje rather than E, and may have as their basis a text of J; 2<sup>22</sup> 3<sup>1a. 3</sup> are redactional, though perhaps not by the same hand.

‡ Mey.'s analysis (ZATW. i. p. 145) is: J 2<sup>23a</sup> 3<sup>1b. 2. 3</sup>; E 2<sup>22</sup> (= 3<sup>4</sup>) 2<sup>23b</sup> 3<sup>1a. 5. 6</sup>. (continuation of Jos. 24<sup>19f. 22</sup>). Bu. (Richt. u. Sam., p. 159 f.) ascribes to E 2<sup>22a</sup> 3<sup>5. 6</sup>; 3<sup>4</sup> is introduced by R to recover connexion. The original, doubtless very brief, form of 2<sup>23</sup>–3<sup>8</sup> (in substance J), can hardly be recovered. Kitt. regards 2<sup>23</sup> 3<sup>1–3</sup> (prob. J) as the only old part of this passage; E is not represented. sion of the account of the great assembly at Shechem and the parting exhortations of Joshua (Jos. 24<sup>1-27</sup>; substantially E). It was followed by the death and burial of Joshua (v.<sup>8f.</sup> Jos. 24<sup>29f.</sup>), to which E's description of the subsequent apostasy of Israel and its consequences (v.<sup>10. 13. 14a. 16f. 20f.</sup>) immediately attached itself. The insertion of Jud. 1<sup>b</sup>-2<sup>5</sup>, and the division of the books, left the story in Jos. without a suitable close, and accordingly Jud. 2<sup>6. 8. 9</sup> were restored in their original connexion in Jos. (24<sup>28-30</sup>), carrying over with them Jud. 2<sup>7</sup> (= Jos. 24<sup>31</sup>), an addition of D.*—7. = Jos. 24<sup>31</sup> (§ 24<sup>29</sup>). The verse is not by the same hand as v.<sup>10</sup>, to which it is parallel; v.<sup>10</sup> is the sequel of v.<sup>9</sup> in E, v.<sup>7</sup>, in expression and representation Deuteronomic, is its counterpart in D.—The elders who survived Joshua] the sheikhs, the head men of the clans, and families, who were the natural guardians of Israelitish custom, law, and religion.† It is not used with primary reference to age, ‡ though the elders here meant were doubtless the coevals of Joshua.—Who survived Joshua] lit. prolonged days after J; a very common phrase in Dt. (e.g. 4<sup>40</sup> 5<sup>33</sup> 11<sup>9</sup> 17<sup>20</sup> 22<sup>7</sup> 30<sup>18</sup> 32<sup>47</sup>) and Deuteronomic passages in other books (e.g. 1 K. 3<sup>14</sup>; cf. also Ex. 20<sup>12</sup>); otherwise infrequent (Is. 53<sup>10</sup> Prov. 28<sup>16</sup> Eccl. 8<sup>13</sup>).—Who had seen all the great work of Yahweh] v.<sup>10</sup> Jos. 24<sup>31</sup> had known, experienced. The “great work of Yahweh” is not to be limited to the conquest of Canaan, but comprehends his whole great deliverance, the exodus, the wandering, and the invasion, of all of which Joshua's generation had been witnesses; cf. Dt. 11<sup>2-7</sup>, where Moses recalls to the Israelites, as they are about to cross the Jordan, how their eyes had seen “all the great work of Yahweh which he wrought” (v.<sup>7</sup>), specifying the Egyptian plagues, the deliverance of Israel and destruction of the Egyptians at the Red Sea, &c. (v.<sup>2-4</sup> cf. 7<sup>18. 19</sup>). The author of Jud. 2<sup>7</sup>, like the author of Dt. 11<sup>2-7</sup> 5<sup>2f.</sup> 7<sup>18f.</sup>, represents the exodus and the conquest as falling within the lifetime of a single generation. In the memory of these signal manifestations of Yahweh's power and grace, that generation remained faithful to him even after their great leader passed away; cf. v.<sup>10</sup>.—8. = Jos. 24<sup>29</sup>. 6. This seems more probable than the alternative hypothesis, that, after the insertion of Jud. 1<sup>1</sup>-2<sup>5</sup>, the close of Jos. 24 was repeated in Jud. 2<sup>6ff</sup>. to resume connexion. That the text in Jos. appears in some points more original (ויהי אחרי הרברים האלה v.<sup>29</sup>; the position of v.<sup>31</sup> = Jud. 2<sup>7</sup> †) is not conclusive. — That the events narrated in 2<sup>6-10</sup> cannot be posterior in time to v.<sup>1-5</sup> was recognized by older commentators, who tried to get over the difficulty by exegetical artifices. Schm. connects: Caeterum quomodo, quae Angelus Jehovah praedixit, impleta fuerint, ex his sequentibus apparebit: Postquam dimisit Josua, etc. The structure of the following verses is suspended; the apodosis begins in v.<sup>11</sup>, Tum vero fecerunt filii Israelis malum, etc. Similarly Ba.: What is narrated in v.<sup>6-10a</sup> is to be regarded as virtually in the pluperfect; v.<sup>10b.11</sup> connects with and continues v.<sup>5</sup>. Samar.*, p. 295). § There are numerous examples of similar procedure; cf. esp. Is. 19<sup>18</sup>, where for the same reason חֲרִם has been altered to חֲרִם, or, in a few manuscripts, to חֲרִם. The latter reading is found in some codd. and ed. Soncino in Jud. 2<sup>9</sup>. It was identified with the modern Tibneh by Eli Smith in 1843 (Bibl. Sacr., p. 483 f.). Guérin, in 1863, was convinced that he had discovered the tomb of Joshua in the most western of the rock tombs over against the town. Many niches for lamps in the forechamber prove that it was once a frequented shrine; and it is not improbable that it is the same that was shown to Christian pilgrims as the sepulchre of Joshua in the 4th century. For confirmation, the Abbé Richard in 1870 found in and before the tomb flint knives, which he combined with Jos. 24<sup>33</sup> 21<sup>40</sup> 6. — There are a number of other places bearing the name Timnath: one in the hill country of Judah (Jos. 15<sup>57</sup>, prob. also Gen. 38<sup>12ff.</sup>); another the scene of Samson's exploits (Jud. 14. 15; Jos. 15<sup>10</sup> 19<sup>43</sup>). The Baals and Astartes, i.e. the heathen gods and goddesses, are coupled in the same way in Jud. 10<sup>6</sup> 1 S. 7<sup>4</sup> 12<sup>10</sup>; † cf. Baals and Asheras, Jud. 3<sup>7</sup>. Baal signifies 'proprietor, possessor' of something, and requires a complement, expressed or implied, thus: Baal-Šor, the Lord of Tyre; Baal-Sidon, Baal-Lebanon, Baal-Hermon, also Baal-Shamen, the Lord of the Heavens; ‡ or Baal-zebub, Baal-berith, &c. It is not a proper name; the name of the Baal of Tyre, e.g., was Melqart; in Israel the Baal (Proprietor) was Yahweh (Hos. 2<sup>16</sup>, Heb. 2<sup>18</sup>). § There were thus innumerable Baals, some of them having proper names of their own, others distinguished only by the place where they were worshipped, or by some attribute. In any religious community the god to which it belonged would ordinarily be spoken of merely as the Baal, the Lord, further definition being unnecessary; but there was among the Canaanites and Phoenicians no one god named Baal. In the Old Testament the plural is sometimes used of this multitude of local deities; sometimes, as here, the singular, for the whole genus false god in contrast to Yahweh. || — Astarte]

Phoen. 'Ashtart; Heb. 'Ashtoreth.* One of the most widely worshipped of the Semitic divinities; in Babylonia and Assyria as Ishtar, in southern Arabia as 'Athtar, in Syria as 'Athar. From 1 K. 11<sup>5.33</sup> 2 K. 23<sup>13</sup> it might appear that the worship of Astarte was specifically Phoenician, but this would be an erroneous inference; it was evidently common through all Palestine, east and west of the Jordan. She had a temple among the Philistines (1 S. 31<sup>10</sup>), gave her name to a city in Bashan, Ashtaroth-karnaim (Dt. 1<sup>4</sup> Gen. 14<sup>5</sup>), and appears in the Moabite stele of King Mesha ('Ashtar-Kemosh, l. 17). Numerous inscriptions from Phoenicia and its colonies attest the wide diffusion and importance of her cult, which was early introduced into Egypt also. As the principal female deity of the Canaanites, the name of Astarte is used in the O.T. in conjunction with Baal as a quasi-appellative for goddess, for which the Hebrew language possesses no proper word.†

11. [הבעלים] the plural here and in עֲשֶׂתְרוֹת v. 13 does not refer to the many images of the gods (Aug., quaest. 16, Ki., Ges., Stud., al.), nor to the manifold local forms of one god (Renan, comparing the many Virgins of Catholic lands, ‡ Baethgen, al.); but to different gods.—13. [וַיַּעֲבֹדוּ לְבַעַל וּלְעֲשֶׂתְרוֹת] the incongruity of number is most probably to be removed by reading לְעֲשֶׂתְרוֹת sg., though the plural is supported by  $\text{מ}$  and verss. It would make no difference in the sense if we made both plur. The construction of the verb presents a more serious difficulty; לַעֲבֹד for עָבַד with accus. is unexampled; § in Jer. 44<sup>3</sup> לַעֲבֹד (>  $\text{ע}$   $\text{ס}$ ) is doublet or gloss to לָקַט. This corruption suggests the correction for our verse; I conjecture that the author wrote וַיַּקְטִירוּ burnt sacrifices (Jer. 7<sup>9</sup> 11<sup>13.17</sup> and often, Hos. 11<sup>2</sup>, &c.), which was altered, by accidental conformation to v. 11, or intentionally, for emphasis, to וַיַּעֲבֹדוּ. Bu. (*Richt. u. If the analysis proposed above be sound, v. 17 is the sequel of v. 16, while v. 18 connects immediately with v. 15. The last two clauses of v. 17 hang somewhat awkwardly, and may, if any one chooses, be ascribed to R; there is no reason for attributing the whole verse to him. — [סָרוּ מִהֶם] the inf. abs. in adverbial accusative, cf. v. 23 Ex. 32<sup>8</sup> Dt. 7<sup>4</sup> &c., Ew. § 280 c. — 18. וְכִי הָקִים יְיָ וְג' . . . וְהָיָה. . . pf. . . pf. consec.; recurring event in past time, Job 1<sup>5</sup> Jud. 6<sup>8</sup> Gen. 38<sup>9</sup> (אִם); כִּי 8<sup>1</sup> Hos. 11<sup>1</sup>. — [מִנְּאֻחָם] מִן of the origin of his emotion, its cause. — [לְחַצְיָהֶם וּרְחֵיקָהֶם] לֶחֶץ 8<sup>4</sup> 4<sup>3</sup> 6<sup>9</sup> 10<sup>12</sup> Ex. 3<sup>9</sup> 1 S. 10<sup>18</sup> 2 K. 13<sup>4.22</sup> Am. 6<sup>14</sup> &c. as this people have transgressed the injunction I laid upon their fathers] Jos. 7<sup>11</sup> (E). RV. lit., my covenant which I commanded their fathers. The verbs (transgress, enjoin) show that berith, rendered in our versions with mechanical uniformity covenant, is not here conceived of as a mutual compact or agreement, but as an ordinance of Yahweh, a rule prescribed by him. In general, in the older literature,\* berith, in its religious use, is a formal act by which the relations between Yahweh and his people are regulated, or the relation thus regulated. Its author is God alone; man's part is only to accept it. In speaking of it, according to circumstances, the thought may rest chiefly, or even exclusively, on one or the other of its two sides; on the solemn promise and pledge of his favour which Yahweh has freely given, or on the character and conduct which he requires, which are in effect the terms of friendly intercourse with him and the enjoyment of his blessings. In the former case it becomes, as in v.<sup>2</sup>, almost equivalent to promise; in the latter, to commandment, injunction, as here, so that it may stand in parallelism to law (torah), as in Hos. 8<sup>1</sup>.† The commandment given to the fathers was, that they should worship Yahweh alone; cf. Ex. 34<sup>12-16</sup> 23<sup>24f. 32f.</sup>.—21. I, on my part, will not drive out, &c.] by their violation of his injunction they have forfeited the promise that accompanied it and was virtually conditional upon their fidelity (Ex. 34<sup>11</sup> 23<sup>23. 27-31</sup>).—A single man of the nations that Joshua left when he died] cf. 22-III. 6. — Motives of Yahweh in leaving these nations; enumeration of them; consequences to Israel. — 22. Cf. 3<sup>4</sup>. Verse 22<sup>b</sup> has a distinctly Deuteronomic colour; v.<sup>22a</sup> is ascribed by Budde, not without some hesitation, to E.\* But the connexion with v.<sup>21</sup>, as the history of interpretation shows, is loose and ambiguous; and the motive for leaving the nations, to try Israel, is not easily reconciled with v.<sup>20f</sup>, where they are left as a punishment for Israel's confirmed unfaithfulness. It seems more probable, therefore, that v.<sup>22</sup> is altogether by a different hand from v.<sup>20f</sup>, presumably that of an editor. — In order to prove Israel by them] cf. 3<sup>1a.4</sup>. Assuming the unity of the context, interpreters have been divided in opinion whether the clause is a continuation of the words of Yahweh in v.<sup>21</sup>, that by them I may prove Israel,† or the writer's explanation of God's purpose, that he might prove Israel. ‡ The latter is the more probable construction, and if the verse be the addition of an editor the only natural one. 22.  $\text{לִמְעַן נִסָּח}$  Dt. 8<sup>2.16</sup>, cf.  $\text{לִנְסַח}$  Jud. 3<sup>1.4</sup>. At this distance from the principal verb, the writer would probably have expressed ut experiar by the personal construction  $\text{לִמְעַן אֶנְסָה}$ , avoiding all ambiguity. —  $\text{דֶּרֶךְ יְהוָה לִלְכֹת בָּם}$  for  $\text{בָּם הָיָה דֶּרֶךְ יְהוָה}$  give a sing.; Houbig. and Doorn. emend  $\text{בָּה}$ . More probably, however, the author wrote  $\text{דֶּרֶךְ יְהוָה}$  (masc. plur.), from which the present text arose by accident. The plur.  $\text{בָּם}$  in  $\text{וְהָיָה בָּם}$  is explained of the many commandments, statutes, and ordinances which constitute the way of Y. —  $\text{לִלְכֹת}$  gerundial, v. 17. 19 1 S. 12<sup>17</sup> 14<sup>33</sup> 2 S. 3<sup>10</sup> Jer. 44<sup>7.8</sup>; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 114, n. 4; Dr.<sup>3</sup> § 205.

23. Verse 23<sup>a</sup>, with 3<sup>2</sup>, clearly belongs to a different circle of ideas from 2<sup>20f.</sup> or 2<sup>22</sup> 3<sup>4</sup>. In 2<sup>23a</sup> 3<sup>2</sup> Yahweh does not drive out the people of Canaan at once, in order that the succeeding generations of Israelites also may have experience of war. This explanation accords well with J's point of view, and to that writer the verses are with considerable probability ascribed by E. Meyer.* Verse 23<sup>b</sup> may perhaps be an editorial addition, connecting the statement of v. 23<sup>a</sup> with the time before Joshua's death (v. 21); it is possible, however, that the editor has only substituted the name Joshua for an original Israel. — Yahweh left these nations] the reference is obviously to nations of which the writer had already spoken, not to the list below in 3<sup>3</sup>. If our analysis be substantially correct, we shall most naturally think of ch. 1, in the fuller form in which it once existed, in which, as appears from v. 36, not only the cities within their own borders which Israel did not conquer were named, but the boundaries of the surrounding nations. — Not expelling them at once] cf. Ex. 23<sup>20f.</sup> Dt. 7<sup>22f.</sup>, which differ materially, however, in conception and expression. The reason for the gradual expulsion is given in 3<sup>2</sup>. — Did not give them into the power of Joshua] the commentators have found it very hard to explain how this could be a punishment for the defection of Israel after the death of Joshua, as in the present connexion it must be; quas nimirum non dederat in manum Josuae,† is what the connexion imperatively requires, but this cannot be extorted from the Hebrew text. — III. 1. Verse 1<sup>a</sup> is the introduction to the catalogue v. 3; v. 1<sup>b</sup> is a doublet to v.<sup>2b</sup>. — To try Israel by them] it was a disciplinary judgement; cf. Dt. 8<sup>2, 16</sup>. This sense would be possible in the assumed context of E (2<sup>20, 21</sup> 3<sup>1a, 3</sup>); perhaps, however, the words were added by the redactor; cf. 2<sup>22</sup> 3<sup>4</sup>. — Namely all those who had no experience of all the wars of Canaan] the generation following the invasion; corresponding to those who knew not Yahweh and the great things he did for Israel (2<sup>10</sup> cf. 2<sup>7</sup>). The words are difficult and inappropriate in their present connexion; they may be either an editorial addition derived from v.<sup>2b</sup>, or, more probably, a gloss to v.<sup>2b</sup> intruded into the text in the wrong place.* — 2. The original sequel of 2<sup>23, 1</sup>.† The text is clearly corrupt; the restoration is somewhat uncertain. The most conservative course is to follow B; merely for the sake of the successive generations of Israelites, to familiarize them with war. A bolder reconstruction would be, merely in order that the Israelites might have experience of war. The sense is not materially different. L well, ut postea discerent filii eorum certare cum hostibus, et habere consuetudinem praeliandi. The incompleteness of the conquest is not attributed to the sinful slackness of Israel (2<sup>1-5</sup>), nor is it designed as a trial of Israel's fidelity to its religion (2<sup>22</sup> 3<sup>4</sup>), nor a punishment for its persistent infidelity (2<sup>20f</sup>); it is a wise appointment of Yahweh, that his people, from generation to generation, may have occasion to cultivate the virtues which only war develops, and learn by experience the superiority of their god to those of the heathen. — Only those who had not known them before] the generation of the invasion had had this training and experience; it is their descendants who are meant in v.<sup>4</sup>. The half verse is superfluous and may be secondary; v.<sup>1b</sup> is a doublet to it.

23. לִבְלֹתִי הוּרִישׁ [the proper negative of the inf. putting them to the trial (v.<sup>1</sup>); for then we can make nothing of the rest of the sentence.* As the text stands it must be rendered, in order that the generations of the Israelites might know (ŠT, Ra., Ki., Cler., Schm., Stud., Ba., Cass., and most). But then the inf. has no object, or rather another verb is interposed, ללמדם מלחמה, —to teach them—war.† The whole sentence, though intelligible, is overloaded and clumsy. § omits the first inf., לרעה, which relieves the worst of the difficulty.‡ It is more satisfactory, though bolder, to treat רעות as corrupt doublet of רעה, and ללמדם as a gloss to the latter, or substitute for it; with the structure cf. Jos. 4<sup>24</sup>, למען רעה כל עמי, הארץ וגו'. Cler. compares Livy, xxxix. 1. —[אשר לפנים לא ירעום] the pl. masc. suff. referring to מלחמה is intolerable; the writer or scribe very likely had in mind the מלחמות נזקן of v.<sup>1b</sup>; the discord in gender is not so unusual. The half verse is not improbably an editorial restriction like v.<sup>1b</sup>; observe the over emphatic use of רק as well as the false concord just noted. —[רק] restrictive particle, with nouns (1 S. 1<sup>13</sup> Am. 3<sup>2</sup>), verbs (Jud. 14<sup>16</sup>), and particles (2 K. 21<sup>8</sup>). It does not always limit the next following word, but often stands at the beginning of the sentence, limiting the emphatic word in it, which has not, however, as in Arab. after إِنَّمَا, a fixed position in the sentence.

3, 4. The peoples which Yahweh left within the bounds of Palestine to try the faith and obedience of Israel. — The introduction to these verses seems to be 3<sup>1a</sup>, these are the nations which Yahweh left. The verses accord better with the representation of E (or D) than of J, to which source v.<sup>3</sup> is attributed by Meyer and Budde; see above, p. 64. With the catalogue compare Jos. 13<sup>2-6</sup>. — The five tyrants of the Philistines] Jos. 13<sup>3</sup> 1 S. 6<sup>16-18</sup>. The five are Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Gath, Ekron. The word rendered tyrant (seren) is used only of the Philistines, and is evidently the native name. That these cities were not conquered by Israel agrees with the statement in 1<sup>22</sup> and contradicts 1<sup>21</sup>; see there. — And all the Canaanites] in J, as we have observed in ch. 1 above, Canaanite is the comprehensive name for the populations west of the Jordan which the Israelites in part subjected and among whom they settled. § It is hardly possible to reconcile all

* The verb in the relative sentence must, as Ba. urges, have the same subj. as the inf.; to teach them war is another end, not easily harmonized with getting knowledge of Israel.

† Ew. (GVI. ii. p. 382) would pronounce ללמדם (Qal), that they might learn.

the Canaanites here with the usage of J; * in the context, as Schmid has justly observed, the words cannot refer to the un-subjugated Canaanites in Israelite territory (ch. 1), but to a compact population on its borders.† In E (and consequently in D), however, the name Canaanite seems to be employed in a more restricted sense for the inhabitants of the lowlands of western, and especially southwestern Palestine; ‡ Nu. 13<sup>29</sup> (E) Dt. 1<sup>7</sup> (cf. 11<sup>30</sup>) Jos. 5<sup>1</sup>; further, Jos. 13<sup>3,4</sup> 2 S. 24<sup>7</sup> Zeph. 2<sup>5</sup>. This corresponds, as far as I can judge, with the use of the name in Egyptian sources, and would be altogether suitable in the text before us, as well as in Jos. 13<sup>3f</sup>, "the Philistines, and the Avvim in the south — all the territory of the Canaanites." For this reason also it is better to ascribe the verse to E. § — The Sidonians] Jos. 13<sup>4</sup>. Here, as often, the collective name for the Phoenicians. || Sidon, the ancient metropolis, gave its name to the entire people, and the denomination persisted after the political and commercial hegemony had long passed to Tyre; see 10<sup>6</sup> 18<sup>7</sup> 1 K. 5<sup>6</sup> (Heb. 5<sup>20</sup>). — The Hittites inhabiting Mount Lebanon] conjectural emendation; ¶ and the versions have Hivvites, by a transcriptional error which occurs in ¶ in Jos. 11<sup>3</sup> also. The Hivvites were a petty people of Central Palestine (Gen. 34<sup>2</sup> cf. 30 36<sup>2</sup> Jos. 9<sup>7</sup>); ¶ the seats of the Hittites, on the contrary, were in Coele Syria and the Lebanon (1 K. 10<sup>29</sup> 2 K. 7<sup>6</sup>; cf. Jud. 1<sup>26</sup> 2 S. 24<sup>6</sup> 5),** where the Egyptian inscriptions also place them. The emendation is therefore necessary. — From Mt. Baal Hermon as far as the Gateway of Hamath] Jos. 13<sup>5</sup> defines their southern boundary somewhat more precisely as "Baal-gad at the foot of Mt. Hermon." Baal-gad, according to Jos. 11<sup>17</sup> (cf. 12<sup>7</sup>) the northern limit of Israelite conquest under Joshua, was in the valley of the Lebanon, the Biqā', and must therefore have been on the western side of Mt. Hermon, perhaps at the modern Ḥāṣbeiyā.*—Hamath] frequently mentioned in Egyptian and Assyrian inscriptions as well as in the O.T., is the modern Ḥamā, a city of 60,000 inhabitants, on the Orontes (el 'Āṣī),† — The Gateway of Hamath, often named as the northern limit of Palestine (Am. 6<sup>14</sup> 2 K. 14<sup>25</sup> 1 K. 8<sup>65</sup> Ez. 47<sup>20</sup> 48<sup>1</sup> Nu. 34<sup>8</sup> cf. 13<sup>21</sup>), is probably the plain Höms, some 30 miles south of Ḥamā, at the intersection of four passes, and of main roads from the coast, the Syrian desert, and north and south through Coele Syria.

The verse implies that the boundaries of Palestine are the desert on the south, and the northern end of the Lebanon range on the north, and from the Antilebanon and the Jordan valley to the sea. ‡ The whole of this territory Israel regarded as included in the gift of Yahweh. Its actual possessions, however, were of much more modest dimensions. The entire seaboard, the Philistine lowlands and the plain of Sharon, as well as the Phoenician coast north of Carmel and the whole region of the Lebanon § remained in the hands of its old inhabitants or were conquered by other invaders like the Philistines. This difference between the ideal and the actual boundaries of the land of Israel is frequently noted.

of the seaboard plain with its five cities. — The Canaanites] in Egyptian texts Canaan (Ka-u'-ng) appears to be a district of southwestern Palestine not very remote from Egypt.* In the Amarna correspondence the land Ki-na-ah-ki is mentioned a number of times, in connexions which point to the vicinity of the Phoenician cities (Acco, Berl. 8; Tyre, Lond. 30).† The Phoenicians called themselves Canaanites, their land Canaan.‡ Before the advent of the Philistines the plain south of Carmel was no doubt occupied by the same race as the coast north of it, and Canaanites seem, at least in Southern Palestine, to have occupied also the hill country back from the coast.§ The current etymological explanation of the name, 'Lowland, Lowlanders' (Rosenmüller, Bibl. Alterthumsk., 1826, ii. 1. p. 75 f., Ges., al. mu.), in contrast either to Aram, or to the Amorites ('Highlanders'), is false both in language and fact; see my note, PAOS. 1890, p. lxvii-lxx. The texts cited above for the more restricted use of the name Canaanite in E and D are too summarily disposed of by Mey. and Bu., who, because they conflict with the representation of J, regard them all as late and erroneous theory. But the theory itself has its origin in the usage of E. — The Sidonians] in Gen. 10<sup>16</sup> Sidon (Phoenicia) is the oldest son, i.e. the most important people, of Canaan; but Bu. is perhaps right in his contention that in the O.T. the name Canaanites is never specifically employed for the Phoenicians.|| See further, Smend, HWB<sup>1</sup>, s. v. the Lebanon in the O.T. are, so far as we can judge, Semites, of the Palestinian, rather than the Aramaean, branch of the race. Heth is a son of Canaan (Gen. 10<sup>15</sup>), and the inclusion of their country in the ideal limits of the promised land shows that it was regarded as part of Canaan. — Baal Hermon] i.e. the Baal of Mt. Hermon; cf. Baal Lebanon in Phoen. inscription. Many scholars identify Baal-gad, Baal-hermon, with the modern Bāniās (Pancas, Caesarea Philippi), on the southern end of Mt. Hermon; so Schwarz, Ges. Thes.; Rob., BR<sup>2</sup>. iii. p. 409 f.; v. Raum., Sepp, Ke., Be., MV., SS., al. The only positive argument for this view is derived from 1 Chr. 5<sup>28</sup>; but this late, and in H corrupt, verse cannot stand against the explicit statement that Baal-gad was in the Biq'ah, with which the site of Bāniās cannot be reconciled. Still less can Baal-gad be Ba'albek (Heliopolis),* which by no stretch of imagination could be said to be at the foot of Hermon. On Hermon as a sacred mountain see Euseb., OS<sup>2</sup>. 217<sup>37</sup>; Jerome, ib. 90<sup>19</sup>; Hilary on Ps. 132; DB<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 1340. — Hamath] the name is found in Egyptian and Assyrian inscriptions; under the Seleucidae it was renamed Epiphaneia (Ptol., v. 15, 16; Plin., n. h., v. 23 § 82; OS<sup>2</sup>. 257<sup>18</sup>; Jerome, on Ez. 47<sup>16</sup>); but the old name remained in local use (Fl. 4. They served to try Israel by] cf. 2<sup>22</sup> 3<sup>1b</sup>. Continuation of v.<sup>3</sup> by the same hand (E). The conception is a frequent one in E (Gen. 22<sup>1</sup> Ex. 20<sup>20</sup>) as well as D. — To know, &c.] Theodoret (qu. 8) will not allow that God tries men for the sake of knowing what is in them; it is only to let them develop and reveal their true character; similarly Aug. 5, 6. The Israelites dwell among the natives of the land, intermarry with them, and worship their gods. — Meyer and Budde, in accordance with their analysis of the foregoing, ascribe these verses to E; but they contain nothing characteristic of E; the catalogue of nations suggests rather Rje (cf. Ex. 34<sup>11</sup>) or a Deuteronomic hand (cf. Dt. 7<sup>1-4</sup> Jos. 23<sup>12</sup>). It seems to me more probable that the verses are substantially from J, amplified by an editor, as the cognate passage in Ex. 34 has been. Such a notice might very well close J's account of the settlement in Canaan; his narrative was not devoid of religious judgement, though it was not so dogmatic as in E and D. — The Canaanites, &c.] to the six peoples here recited the complete catalogue of the "seven nations" of Palestine (Dt. 7<sup>1</sup>) adds the Girgashites (Jos. 3<sup>10</sup> 24<sup>11</sup>); but usually only these six are named (Ex. 3<sup>8.17</sup> 23<sup>23</sup> 33<sup>2</sup> 34<sup>11</sup> Dt. 20<sup>17</sup> &c.). But the Hivvites of Shechem and Gibeon (Gen. 34 Jos. 9) were surely not Bedawin; nor is it probable that a descriptive name of the sort would have clung to them in spite of their change of life. Perhaps the older interpreters in the Onomastica were more nearly right in connecting it with חיה † (θηρίωδεις, ὡς περ ὄφεις); it is conceivable that it is an animal name, the Snake clan. — Amorites] the etymological interpretation, 'Highlanders' (Simonis, and many), is purely fictitious, like the corresponding explanation of Canaanite (above, on 3<sup>8</sup>); though in E and D the Amorites are represented as the inhabitants of the mountainous interior of Western Palestine, the land conquered by Israel (Nu. 13<sup>29</sup> Dt. 1<sup>7</sup>). The Amorites are represented in Gen. 10<sup>16</sup> as a Canaanite people, like the Phoenicians and Hittites. Sayce has attempted to prove that they belonged ethnologically to a distinct race; ‡ in language, religion, and civilisation, however, they are not in any way distinguished in the O.T. from the other peoples of Palestine.

III. 7-11. Othniel delivers Israel from Cushan-rishathaim.

—The Israelites displease Yahweh by neglecting him for the worship of the gods of Canaan (v.<sup>7</sup>). In anger he gives them up to Cushan-rishathaim, king of Syria on the Euphrates, to whom they are subject eight years (v.<sup>8</sup>). At last, moved by their cries, he raises up a deliverer in the person of Othniel ben Kenaz, who goes to war with Cushan, and by God's help prevails over him (v.<sup>9-10</sup>). The land enjoys security for forty years, until the death of Othniel (v.<sup>11</sup>).

The pragmatic introductory and closing formulas in which each of the stories of the judges is set, § are here, where they are employed for the first time, appropriately expanded to their complete typical form. This amplitude of the setting, however, only makes more conspicuous its emptiness. || It contains nothing but the names of Othniel and Cushan, the former of which is derived from 1<sup>13</sup>, the other is an enigma; no single detail of the struggle is recorded, — it is evident that the author knew none. Nor does the bare fact pass unchallenged. The subjugation of Canaan at this time by an enemy from so remote a quarter is highly improbable,* if not beyond the bounds of possibility; its liberation by Othniel, a Kenizzite clan in the extreme south, scarcely less improbable. It can hardly be regarded as evidence of inordinate skepticism that many recent scholars have doubted whether this typical oppression and deliverance has any basis of fact, or even of tradition, and have surmised that the author filled the blanks in his scheme with the first chance names at hand.† That of Othniel would naturally suggest itself, and had the advantage of giving a judge to Judah; whence that of Cushan came it is idle to guess.

The method by which Sayce (Higher Criticism, p. 297 ff.) procures the "verdict of the monuments" against the critics on this point is eminently characteristic. We are told that the people of Mitanni (according to Sayce the native name of Aram-naharaim) were among the foes—"Libyans, Sicilians, Sardinians, Greeks, Cypriots, Hittites, and Philistines"—who combined against Egypt in the reign of Ramses III. (p. 298); and from the fact that the King of Mitanni does not figure at Medinet Habu among the conquered foe, Sayce concludes that he probably remained behind in Syria or Palestine (p. 300); the eight years that Cushan oppressed Israel would exactly correspond with the eight years between the beginning of the Libyan attack on Egypt and the campaign of the Pharaoh in Syria (303 f.). Prof. Sayce gives no references. The land of Mitanni (Miten) is mentioned, so far as I can ascertain, but twice in the inscriptions of Ramses III., ‡ and that, not in any connexion with the incursion of the northern barbarians, but in those catalogues of remote and strange countries which were compiled in order that the Pharaoh might seem as great a conqueror as Thothmes III., from whose inscriptions many of the names are derived.§ That "we know from the Egyptian records that Mitanni or Aram-naharaim took part in the invasion of Egypt" is an assertion for which Prof. Sayce owes it to us to produce the evidence. Without this proof, the whole combination is as baseless as it is ingenious. ||

Others distinguish Asherah from Astarte in different ways.‡ On the other hand, the existence of a goddess Asherah is denied by some conservative scholars,§ and by many recent critics; || the passages which seem to prove the contrary are to be explained either as metonymy (the name of the symbol being put for that of the goddess), or as the confusion by late writers of the symbol asherah with the goddess Astarte. So far as the O.T. is concerned these scholars are right; it gives no sufficient evidence that a goddess Asherah was worshipped by Canaanites or Israelites. The name, Ebed-asherah,¶ in letters found at el-Amarna, may signify no more than that the asherah post itself was esteemed divine, a fetish, or a cultus-god, as no one doubts that it was in O.T. times. See on the whole question, my article, "Asherah" in the new Bible Dictionary.

In 1 K. 18<sup>19</sup> the 400 prophets of Asherah are interpolated (We., Sta., Klo.); 2 K. 21<sup>7</sup> פסל האשרה פסל is gloss, in the same sense in which 2 Chr. 33<sup>7</sup> substitutes פסל; 1 K. 15<sup>13</sup> = 2 Chr. 15<sup>16</sup> מפלצח לאשרה is not, "a horrible thing (traditionally, Priapus, phallus) to Asherah," but, as an asherah; 2 K. 23<sup>7</sup> בתיים לאשרה is obscure and prob. corrupt; if the traditional vestments be right, it would not prove the existence of a goddess or an idol, but only that the sacred post was draped. 2 K. 23<sup>4</sup> remains, the only passage beside our text in which there can be no doubt that a divinity is meant; but even here it may only be one of the common cases in which part of the apparatus of worship has become an object of worship — a cultus god. That later writers took the asherahs for heathen deities, or idols, is perhaps to be inferred from the appearance of a new fem. plur. אֲשֵׁרוֹת, 2 Chr. 19<sup>3</sup> 33<sup>3</sup> Jud. 3<sup>7</sup>†; in Old Hebrew the name of the class is אֲשֵׁרִים, from which the nom. unitatis is formed in the usual way, אֲשֵׁרָה, which owes its fem. gender, not to its being or representing a female divinity, but to grammatical formation.

An incursion of these Bedawin, and their defeat and expulsion by the Kenizzites of Debir (Othniel), is conceivable enough; and if the names are taken from any historical connexion, we might conjecture that it was from some such story. כוּשָׁן is related to כוּשׁ as לוֹשׁ to לוֹשֵׁן, כָּנַע to כְּנַעַן, יָהִר to יְהִירָן, &c.; observe the frequency of clan names in an in the Midianite genealogy, Gen. 25<sup>2</sup>, in comparison with the Ishmaelites, 25<sup>13ff</sup>. the analogy of Aram-naharaim, to which also the dual רַשְׁעִיִּים is probably conformed. — [אֲרַם נַהֲרַיִם] apparently "Aram of two rivers"; the ancients thought of the Euphrates and Tigris, many moderns of the Euphrates and Chabōras, or Belias* (Belih); others of the Euphrates and Orontes,† or Euphrates and Chrysorrhōas (Baradā).‡ It may fairly be questioned, however, whether the pronunciation which makes the noun dual is not factitious. As a geographical term נַהֲרַיִם probably corresponds to the Egyptian Naharīn § (there is no trace of a dual form), which lay on both sides of the upper Euphrates; see Meyer and Müller cited above, p. 87 n. The name would then signify merely "River-Syria." The only cities in Aram-naharaim which are named in the O.T. are Harran (Gen. 24<sup>10</sup>) and Pethor (Dt. 23<sup>5</sup> cf. Nu. 22<sup>5</sup>); the latter was on the west side of the Euphrates (Schrader, KAT<sup>2</sup>, p. 156). — 10. [וַיִּשְׁפֹּט אֶת יִשְׂרָאֵל] an exhaustive examination of the usage of the verb שָׁפַט by Prof. H. Ferguson is to be found in JBL, viii. p. 130-136; see also Bachmann, p. 25 ff. That שָׁפַט often means 'give judgement,' מִשְׁפָּט, 'judicial decision,' needs no illustration; cf. only 1 K. 3<sup>28</sup>. But it is often 'do justice, or get justice done,' 'give one his rights or his dues.' It is thus equivalent on the one hand to 'defend, deliver,' on the other to 'condemn, punish.' 1 K. 8<sup>32</sup> illustrates both; cf. the Latin vindicare in both senses. See Is. 1<sup>17</sup> (רִיב ||) Jer. 5<sup>28</sup> Ps. 10<sup>18</sup> 72<sup>4</sup> 26<sup>1</sup> (vindicate me, O Yahweh). It is parallel to פָּלַט Ps. 43<sup>1</sup>; הִצִּיל, הִצִּיל, 82<sup>3, 4</sup>; 72<sup>4</sup>. In Judges it is synonymous with the last-mentioned verb, 2<sup>16, 18</sup> 3<sup>9f</sup>. 10<sup>1f</sup>. &c.; cf. Neh. 9<sup>27</sup>, where מוֹשִׁיעַ stands for שׁוֹפֵט; and so well established is this signification that שָׁפַט is construed, like other verbs of delivering, rescuing, with מִן or מִן, 1 S. 24<sup>16</sup> 2 S. 18<sup>19, 31</sup>. This is probably the sense in 1 S. 8<sup>27</sup>; the Israelites demand a king, "that our king may vindicate (judge) us, and march out at our head and fight our battles" (C, Drus., al.), closely parallel to the present passage.

III. 12-30. Ehud kills Eglon, king of Moab, and liberates Israel. — The Israelites again offend Yahweh, who enables the king of Moab to defeat them, occupy Jericho, and hold Israel in subjection for eighteen years (v.<sup>12-14</sup>). From this tyranny they are delivered by Ehud ben Gera, a left-handed Benjamite, who by a ruse secures from Eglon a private audience (v.<sup>15-20</sup>), assassinates him (v.<sup>21f</sup>), escapes (v.<sup>23-26</sup>), and at the head of his tribesmen from Mt. Ephraim cuts off the Moabites west of the Jordan (v.<sup>27-29</sup>). The land enjoys a long period of security (v.<sup>30</sup>).

the usual pragmatic setting, employing in both the introduction (v.<sup>12-15</sup>) and conclusion (v.<sup>28-30</sup>) material derived from the older narrative. As in other cases, he converts the story of a local struggle into a chapter of the religious and political history of all Israel. The unity and integrity of the story itself (v.<sup>15b-27</sup>) has until recently been unquestioned; only the beginning has been supplanted by the phrases of D, and the sequel of v.<sup>27</sup> is not completely preserved in v.<sup>28-29</sup>. Winckler, however, has lately endeavoured to prove that the narrative is composite, and to separate it into its elements, J and E.* Neither his analysis nor his exegesis is likely to be accepted, but he has shown that the story is not as homogeneous as has been generally believed. Verse <sup>20</sup>, in particular, is not the sequel to v.<sup>19</sup>, but a variant parallel to it; and in the following verses to the end traces of duplication may be discovered (see esp. v.<sup>26ff.</sup>).

It is natural to suppose that the memory of Ehud's exploit was kept alive among his tribesmen of Benjamin; his story retold on holidays at Gilgal. It has the quality of the best Hebrew folk-stories, and is beyond doubt one of the oldest in the book. From what source it was extracted by the author of Judges, it is difficult to decide with confidence. Stade ascribes it to E,† chiefly on the ground of resemblances between 3<sup>15</sup> and 10<sup>10, 13</sup>; but the expressions in 3<sup>15</sup> are probably from the hand of D (cf. 3<sup>9</sup>). Schrader, on the contrary, attributes it to J,‡ and as between the two the impression which the whole tenor of the narrative makes is favourable to the latter hypothesis.§

The events related are in nowise improbable. It would indeed be strange if the success of the Israelites in establishing themselves west of the Jordan had not tempted others to follow their example. northern end of the Dead Sea or beyond, may very well have brought under their power the plain of Jericho and the adjacent parts of Mt. Ephraim (Benjamin). The well-designed and boldly executed ruse by which the tyrant is slain, and in the ensuing confusion his retainers cut off, has altogether the note of reality. Nöldeke,* while recognizing this, thinks that the name of the deliverer cannot be historical: Gera is a son (Gen. 46<sup>21</sup>) or grandson (1 Chr. 8<sup>3</sup>) of Benjamin, i.e. a Benjamite clan, Ehud himself a great-grandson (1 Chr. 7<sup>10</sup> cf. 8<sup>6</sup>); the concurrence of the names of two clans of the same tribe is conclusive. There is no difficulty, however, in supposing that a clan of Benjamin in later times bore the name of the hero Ehud; or even that, without this, the name was introduced into the genealogies of the chronicler directly from our text.†

12-14. The Israelites again offend Yahweh; with his support Eglon attacks them and occupies Jericho; they are subject to Moab eighteen years. — The usual introduction; only the name of Eglon and his conquest of Jericho, the Palm City, are derived from the old story; the rest is made up of the set formulas of D. — 12<sup>a</sup>. 4<sup>1</sup> 10<sup>6</sup> 13<sup>1</sup> cf. 3<sup>7</sup> 6<sup>1</sup> 2<sup>11</sup> (comm. there). — Yahweh enabled Eglon to prevail over Israel] it was Yahweh who, to punish the sin of his people, gave him this power; cf. nothing from these general phrases, and are tempted to surmise that the author of Judges has here curtailed the story. The Palm City is Jericho; see on 1<sup>16</sup>. The mention of Jericho here has been found difficult. According to Jos. 6<sup>21-26</sup> Joshua totally destroyed the city and laid the site under a ban; 1 K. 16<sup>34</sup> records the rebuilding of the city in the reign of Ahab and the fulfillment of Joshua's curse. In the intervening centuries the place is named only here and in 2 S. 10<sup>5</sup>. These passages are commonly harmonized with 1 K. 16<sup>34</sup> by the supposition that down to the time of Ahab Jericho had been an unwall'd town, and that Hiel drew upon himself the curse by attempting to fortify it;* but the passage before us would rather lead us to infer that Jericho was a strong place, the possession of which secured Eglon's hold on his conquests west of the Jordan; and it is not very probable that David left this important position, one of the two great eastern gateways of his kingdom (cf. 2 S. 10<sup>5</sup>), unfortified. — 14, 15<sup>a</sup>. cf. v. 8<sup>b-9</sup>.

specifically suggests statues. Gilgal itself probably had its name from an old stone circle (cromlech),* whose stones, according to a popular tradition, were set up by Joshua to commemorate the passage of the Jordan (Jos. 4<sup>20</sup>); and it has frequently been surmised that the sculptured stones or images of our text are in some way connected with the stones erected by Joshua.† Others, gathering from v.<sup>19, 26</sup> that when a man had passed this point he was safe on Israelite soil, suppose that they were boundary stones (images) set up by Eglon.‡ — I have a private communication for thee] a natural pretext, and all the more likely to be admitted without suspicion because Ehud had just brought the tribute of his tribesmen; cf. v.<sup>20</sup>. — He commanded, Silence!] the command is addressed not to Ehud,§ but to the attendants,|| who are to leave him in privacy. — 20. The verse seems to be parallel to v.<sup>19</sup>, rather than a sequel to it. In v.<sup>19</sup> Ehud appears before the king in his public audience room and announces that he has a secret communication to make to him; the king has the room cleared, leaving Ehud alone with him. In v.<sup>20</sup> Ehud goes in to him as he is sitting in his roof-chamber alone and announces that he has a divine communication for him. The difficulty was early felt, and various exegetical expedients have been proposed to relieve it. The favourite explanation is that the words of Ehud in v.<sup>19</sup>, “I have a private communication to make to thee, O King,” were not spoken by him in person in the public audience, but were conveyed to the king by an attendant; upon receiving this message Eglon dismissed his court and received Ehud alone in his private apartments.¶ Another hypothesis is, that after hearing the words of Ehud, spoken in public, Eglon dismissed the bystanders and retired to his private roof-chamber, whither Ehud was presently conducted.** Either of these suppositions is easy enough in matter of fact; but neither of them is exegetically plausible. If the author had meant the first, he would have given Ehud's words in a different form;* if the second,† he would not have left it to the imagination of the reader. — Where he was sitting in his cool upper story alone] not in the public divan. The upper story (aliyah, still called in Arabic by the same name) is an additional, ordinarily third, story raised above the flat roof of the house at one corner, or upon a tower-like annex to the building. It generally contains but a single apartment, of larger or smaller dimensions, through which latticed windows on all sides give free circulation of air, making it the most comfortable part of the house. — I have a divine communication for thee] cf. v.<sup>19</sup>. The words naturally suggest a communication from the God of Israel which had come to Ehud, whether by dream,‡ oracle, or otherwise, and which it concerned Eglon to hear.‡ Others suppose that Ehud meant by the intentionally ambiguous phrase, I have God's business with you, a divine commission to execute upon you.§ It does not appear that the author had this ingenious equivocation in mind; or that he would have thought it worth while to protect, by so slender a pretext, Ehud's reputation for veracity. He tells of it as a clever and successful ruse, with no more reflexion on its morality than on that of the assassination itself. — He arose from his chair] presumably as a sign of reverence for the oracle. || The movement, which Ehud may have reckoned upon, gave him an opportunity to get within striking distance without exciting suspicion, which he could hardly have done if Eglon had remained seated, and for this reason it is related. — 21. Ehud, still without arousing suspicion, reaches with his left hand for his dirk (v.<sup>16</sup>), quickly draws, and plunges it into the king's belly. — 22. The force of the blow was such that, in spite of the length of the weapon, the hilt followed the blade in; the dirk was doubtless without either guard or cross-piece. — Ehud left the knife sticking in the wound. — And the fat closed after the blade] the fat which covered the intestines; cf. v.<sup>17</sup>. It is not necessary to infer from the preceding clause that the whole hilt, pommel and all, disappeared; so that there is no conflict between the two statements.* The last words of the verse are very difficult, and almost certainly corrupt. The most probable interpretation is, and the dirt came out] the feces; not from the wound,† but through the anus, the usual consequence of such a wound in the abdomen.‡ This somewhat drastic touch is altogether in the vein of the narrator; cf. v.<sup>16</sup> 17. 24b. The emendation of the Hebrew text which it necessitates is not difficult. The translation preferred in RV., and it (sc. the sword) came out behind, § gives a mere guess at the meaning of the word, and is grammatically unsound. The rendering of RV<sup>mg</sup>, he (Ehud) went out into the antechamber, || is only possible if, with Winckler, we ascribe the words to a different author from the first clause of v.<sup>23</sup>. Moreover, the meanings attributed to פֶּרֶשֶׁת by those who construe thus are fictitious, the product of most improbable etymological combinations, that with Ar. فَرَشَد 'straddle' being not the least absurd. In the present context the subject cannot be Ehud, whose exit is regularly related in the next following words; no author is negligent enough to write, and he went out to the parshedon, and Ehud went out to the misderon.* If we make Ehud the subject, we must either assume that one of these two clauses is a gloss to the other (Ew., Bö., al.), or that they came from two different sources and have been most awkwardly juxtaposed by the compiler (Winckler). Against the former alternative it may properly be urged that the supposed explanation is as obscure as the word to be explained. It is barely possible, however, that פֶּרֶשֶׁת is a Greek gloss (? προστροφῶν), or the corruption of such a gloss. The translations προστάδα, παραστάδα (Α) τὰ πρὸς τὴν (Σ) are guesses following hints in the sound of the word. In this obscurity it is perhaps best, with Jewish exegetical tradition, to find in פֶּרֶשְׁתָּה the subject of the vb., and then to emend with Nö.,† Bu., הַפֶּרֶשֶׁת Ex. 29<sup>14</sup> &c., the feces (in the stomach and bowels — not excrement); פֶּרֶשְׁתָּה may have arisen by accidental conformation to מִסְדְּרוֹנָה v. 23a.

A number of pin-tumblers then drop into corresponding holes in the bolt and lock it. The two halves of the verse have the appearance of doublets; † the first clause of v.<sup>b</sup> cannot be construed in continuation of v.<sup>a</sup>, and as a circumstantial clause depending from the preceding — he escaped . . . he having passed over, ‡ — is unusually awkward. The structure is exactly parallel to v.<sup>a</sup>, and the significant verb, he escaped, is found in both halves. — While they were delaying] v.<sup>24f.</sup> — He passed the sculptured stones] the way in which these are mentioned here and in v.<sup>19</sup> is thought to indicate that this was the last Moabite outpost, beyond which he was in no danger of being stopped or overtaken by the enemy; § but in our ignorance of the topography this is a somewhat uncertain inference; the words may be meant only to describe the road Ehud took. In v.<sup>26</sup> we might even translate, he crossed (sc. the Jordan) to, or near, the sculptured stones; || see below. — To Seirah] otherwise unknown. If v.<sup>27</sup> is the original sequel of v.<sup>26b</sup>, it must have been a place on the edge of the highlands of Ephraim.

It is commonly assumed, though without any distinct intimation in the text, that the scene of Ehud's exploit was Jericho, v.<sup>13</sup>, ¶ where Eglon resided, either permanently, or, as is more probable, at the time for the collection of the yearly tribute. But it is difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile this with v.<sup>18f. 26b</sup>, since Gilgal is not on the way from Jericho to Mt. Ephraim, but in exactly the opposite direction, toward the fords of the Jordan leading to the land of Moab.** All becomes natural, however, if we assume that ately with 3<sup>30</sup> ("when Ehud was dead"). It is to be inferred from these facts that the story of Shamgar's exploit was inserted here by a hand not only later than the Deuteronomic author of 3<sup>30</sup> 4<sup>1</sup>, but than the editor who introduced the "Minor Judges" and made them a place in the chronology.*

After him came Shamgar ben Anath] Shamgar is named in Jud. 5<sup>6</sup>, where, with Jael, he represents the hour of Israel's deepest humiliation under the hand of its foes, just before the appearance of Deborah, and there is no reason to doubt that he is a historical figure. The story of the slaughter of the six hundred Philistines reminds us of Samson, but, in its form, still more of the exploits of David's heroes, 2 S. 21<sup>15-22</sup> 23<sup>8ff.</sup>,† and is very likely extracted from the same or a similar source. The name Shamgar is foreign; perhaps Hittite. Anath is a goddess of whose worship there are many evidences in Palestine in names of places which were seats of her cult,‡ and whose name appears on Egyptian monuments from the 18th dynasty.—He smote the Philistines] all the evidence we have goes to show that the Philistines did not seriously trouble the central tribes until shortly before the time of Saul; see above on 3<sup>3</sup> (p. 80). The Song of Deborah celebrates the victorious issue of the struggle of the central and northern tribes against the Canaanites, who in the days of Shamgar (5<sup>6</sup>) had brought Israel to such straits. It knows nothing of a contemporaneous oppression by the Philistines. As a champion of Israel against the Philistines, therefore, Shamgar appears too early.§ — With an ox-goad] || the Syrian ploughman's goad is a formidable weapon, sometimes eight feet long, armed at one end with a spike, at the other with a chisel-shaped blade for cleaning the plough; and on occasion would make a very good substitute for a spear. Whether Shamgar is the original hero of this story may be doubted; Jud. 5<sup>6</sup> certainly suggests no such deliverance. The similarity of the exploit to those of David's Gibborim has been often observed (e.g. by Schm.). The resemblance to the slaughter of the Philistines at Lehi by Shammah ben Agé (2 S. 23<sup>11c</sup>) is particularly striking; and the conjecture may not seem too hazardous that the feat of David's comrade has been ascribed, perhaps partly in consequence of the similarity of the names, to the Shamgar of 5<sup>6</sup>, of whom nothing was known. Cf. also Jud. 15<sup>14ff</sup>. (Samson at Lehi). With the name Shamgar we may perhaps compare Sangar, king of Gargamiš (then the chief city of the Hittite country) in the days of Ašurnasirpal and Salmanassar II. (9th cent. B.C.); ‡ cf. also Samgar-nebo Jer. 39<sup>3</sup>. There was a kingdom Sangara on the upper Tigris; § a river Sangarius in Asia Minor (N. iii. 187, xvi. 719; Strabo, xii. p. 543; Ptol., v. 1, 6). #### IV. Deborah and Barak deliver Israel from the Canaanites; the defeat and death of Sisera.

LITERATURE. — G. A. Cooke, The History and Song of Deborah, 1892.

The Israelites again offend Yahweh, who gives them into the power of Jabin, the Canaanite king of Hazor, and Sisera, his general, for twenty years (4<sup>1-3</sup>). Deborah, a prophetess, instigates Barak to take the field against Sisera (v.<sup>4-9</sup>). He raises Zebulun and Naphtali and occupies Mt. Tabor. Sisera, advancing against him through the plain, is attacked and routed, and his army cut to pieces (v.<sup>10-16</sup>). Sisera escapes on foot to the tent of Jael, who conceals him in the tent and kills him while he sleeps (v.<sup>17-22</sup>). Jabin is subdued (v.<sup>23f</sup>).

The Song of Deborah, ch. 5<sup>2-31</sup>, is a triumphal ode, celebrating the victory of the Israelites under the lead of Deborah and Barak over Sisera and the kings of Canaan, and the death of Sisera by the hand of Jael. The poem is in places obscure or unintelligible, in consequence chiefly of corruption of the text; but its general tenor is clear. By the vividness of every touch, and especially by the elevation and intensity of feeling which pervades it, it makes the impression of having been written by one who had witnessed the great events which it commemorates.* The prose narrative, 4<sup>4-22</sup>, also gives an account of a rising of Israelite tribes instigated by Deborah and led by Barak, and of the defeat and death of Sisera. The relation of this narrative to the Song must be our first inquiry.

The chief points of difference between the two are these: 1. In the poem the kings of Canaan assemble to battle (v.<sup>19</sup>). Sisera is evidently at their head, the greatest king among them (v.<sup>20</sup>). In his palace the queen-mother, whose ladies-in-waiting are princesses (v.<sup>20</sup>), sits expecting his return (v.<sup>23-30</sup>).† In the prose narrative, ch. 4, Sisera is only the general of Jabin king of Hazor (v.<sup>7, 17</sup>), who in v.<sup>2, 23, 24</sup> (D) is even called king of Canaan. 2. In ch. 5 all the tribes around the Great Plain — Ephraim, Benjamin, Machir (Manasseh), Issachar, Zebulun, Naphtali — join in the struggle, while the more remote tribes, Dan, Asher, * See Introduction to ch. 5, below.

and even Reuben and Gilead beyond the Jordan, are bitterly reproached for selfishly standing aloof from the cause of all Israel. It is the uprising of a whole people. In ch. 4, on the other hand, Barak collects a force of ten thousand men out of Zebulun and Naphtali only.* 3. The most striking difference is in the description of Sisera's death. In 4<sup>21</sup>, as he lies fast asleep on the ground in the tent, Jael with a hammer drives a tent-pin through his temples into the earth. In 5<sup>25-27</sup>, on the contrary, as he is standing at the door of the tent drinking milk from a bowl, Jael strikes him a crushing blow on the head, and he sinks dead at her feet.†

Closer examination shows that the account in ch. 4 is not entirely self-consistent. Jabin king of Hazor, or of Canaan, has really nothing to do with the story; he takes no part in the struggle, and only reappears in v. 17 and the editor's words at the end. Sisera is here, too, the real protagonist; and that in this version of his story also he was originally represented as a king is clear from the fact that he has a residence city of his own, remote from Hazor. The topographical data of the chapter are conflicting, and make it impossible to form a consistent conception of the battle and the flight. The Israelites assemble at Kedesh in Naphtali, as if for an attack upon Hazor; but march, peaceable and unmolested, by the gates of the enemy's capital to Mt. Tabor. Sisera advances against them from Harosheth (v. 13), and the battle takes place in the plain at the foot of the mountain. The routed Canaanites flee toward Harosheth, closely followed by the Israelites (v. 16). Sisera escapes alone on foot to the encampment of Heber the Kenite near Kedesh (v. 17 cl. 11), many hours distant to the north, with Barak in hot pursuit. His flight took him straight through the territory of the tribes which were in arms, and past the very doors of his master's city. Why did he not take refuge within its walls rather than in the tent of a nomad?

* In 5<sup>15</sup> it seems that both Deborah and Barak belong to Issachar; while in ch. 4 Deborah's home is in the heart of Mt. Ephraim, and Barak's at Kedesh in Naphtali. The text of 5<sup>15</sup>, however, is too insecure to permit us to lay great stress upon this.

These inconcinnities probably result, at least in part, from the combination of two narratives; one an account of a war waged by Zebulun and Naphtali against Jabin of Hazor, the other of the war with Sisera king of Harosheth and his allies which is the subject of the Song of Deborah. The two have been superficially harmonized at the most essential point by making Sisera the general of Jabin. An analysis of the chapter is scarcely possible; nor can we say what common feature led to the incongruous union.

The analysis is attempted by Bruston, "Les deux Jéhovistes," Revue de Thél. et Philos., 1886, p. 35 f. (quoted by Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 70 n.) as follows: to the first Jehovist he ascribes . . . 4<sup>2bβ. 3bα. 4-9</sup> (with minor traces of redaction in v. 7. 9) 10<sup>aβ. b. 12-15a. 16</sup> 5<sup>1-31a</sup>; to the second, 4<sup>1. 2a, ba. 3bβ. 3a</sup> [words corresponding to 3<sup>9. 15</sup>] 10<sup>aα. 11</sup> [defeat of Canaanites at Kadesh] 15<sup>b. 17-24</sup> 5<sup>31b</sup>. — If v. 17<sup>b</sup> is not an editorial addition, Heber must belong to the story of Jabin (Bu., Co.), and as Jael unquestionably belongs to that of Sisera, it might be conjectured that in making her Heber's wife the writer who combined the two stories had attempted to harmonize them by an artifice similar to that by which Sisera was made Jabin's general; and it might be further surmised that in the original story Jabin met at the tents of Heber a fate like that which overtook Sisera at the hand of Jael. But all this is mere conjecture.

The war of Zebulun and Naphtali against Jabin, king of Hazor, and his allies is recounted in Jos. 11<sup>1-9</sup>, where it is magnified into the conquest of all the northern Canaanites by Joshua and all Israel, in the same way in which the victory of Judah and Simeon over Adoni-zedek (Adoni-bezek) of Jerusalem (Jud. 1<sup>4-7</sup>) is elaborated in Jos. 10 into the account of Joshua's conquest of all Southern Canaan. We may surmise that the story of Jabin, of which we have the fragmentary remains in Jud. 4 Jos. 11, came from the same source from which Jud. 1 and the kindred fragments in Jos. were derived (J).* Too little is left of it to make a reconstruction possible; but it is a not improbable conjecture that in its original connexion this story formed a chapter in the account of the conquest of Northern Canaan, corresponding to the taking of Hebron by Caleb and of Bethel by Joseph, the positive complement of Jud. 1<sup>30. 33</sup>. The story of Sisera in ch. 4, after the elimination of the elements derived from that of Jabin, gives us a number of details which are not found in ch. 5; viz., the name of Deborah's husband, Lapidoth; her home, between Bethel and Ramah; * Barak's father's name, Abinoam, and his residence, Kedesh in Naphtali; † Sisera's city, Harosheth ha-goyim; his chariotry; the position of the Israelites before the action, at Tabor. In the description of Sisera's end there is both a close resemblance and a striking difference between the two versions. Wellhausen, ‡ W. R. Smith, § and others think that 4<sup>21</sup> originated in a prosaic misunderstanding of 5<sup>26</sup> (see comm. on the vv.). It would not follow, however, that ch. 4 is merely a bald prose version of ch. 5. || Dependence on the poem, in this and other particulars, does not exclude the use of other sources of tradition, from which the details mentioned above may have been derived; and there is no substantial reason to doubt that the basis of ch. 4 is an old prose story of Sisera, which, though not rivalling the Song of Deborah in antiquity, is not conspicuously inferior to the other stories in the book.

It is an interesting question, and one the solution of which, if it could be reached, would be of considerable importance, whether the prose narrative was originally prefixed to the Ode as an introduction, perhaps in such a collection as the Sepher ha-yashar, in the manner familiar to us in the great Arab collections. There are no very decisive considerations on either side; on the whole, the impression which ch. 4 makes upon me is unfavourable to this hypothesis. From what source the story of Sisera in ch. 4 is derived can hardly be determined. ¶ It is introduced in the usual way (4<sup>1-3</sup>); the close is found in 4<sup>23f.</sup>; the chronological note, naturally, in 5<sup>31f.</sup>

2. The name Hazor appears in the list of Thothmes III. (No. 32) and in the Papyrus Anastasi (Müller, Asien u. Europa, p. 173); also in the Amarna despatches. It was fortified by Solomon (1 K. 9<sup>15</sup>), as a place of commanding importance in Upper Galilee, and captured by Tiglath Pileser (734 B.C.; 2 K. 15<sup>29</sup>). The most definite clue for the determination of the site is given by 1 Macc. 11<sup>67ff.</sup>, cf. Fl. Jos., ant. xiii. 5, 6 f. § 154–162; v. 5, 1 § 199. Extensive ruins at Tell Harreh show that it was once a place of considerable size and strength; those at Tell el-Khureibeh are less important; at Gebel Ḥaḍīreh none have been discovered. The last-named site perhaps best agrees with the indications in 1 Macc. No great stress can be laid on the similarity of the name; for ḥaḍīreh is a common Arabic appellative ('sheepfold, pen'). — The relation of the Jabin of our text to the one in Jos. 11, and the question how Hazor, which was totally destroyed by Joshua, is here again the centre of the Canaanite power in the north, are much discussed by older commentators beginning with Thdt. (qu. 10). The common solution is, that Hazor had been rebuilt (Thdt., a Lyra, a Lap., Masius, Schm., Cler., al. mu.), and that the Jabin here named was a successor, and probably descendant, of the Jabin of Jos. 11. The title king of Canaan gives a good deal of trouble to the conscientious old commentator Schmid, who justly observes that Canaan was not a political unity, under one king; cf. also Cler. — [סיסרא] the form of the name is not Canaanite, and probably not Semitic; we may perhaps compare the numerous Hittite names ending in -sira (Ḫitäsira, Mauṛasira, &c., Müller, Asien u. Europa, p. 332). It is found also in the list of Nethinim (native temple-slaves) Ezra 2<sup>58</sup> Neh. 7<sup>55</sup>. — [בְּחֻקָּה] 8<sup>1</sup> 1 S. 2<sup>16</sup> Ez. 34<sup>4</sup>.

4, 5. Deborah. — 4. The verse belongs to the old story of Sisera. Deborah was the moving spirit in the Israelite rising which overthrew Sisera (5<sup>7, 12, 15</sup> 4<sup>6, 9f. 14</sup>). — A prophetess] in the older sense of the word, an inspired woman; cf. Ex. 15<sup>20</sup>. Impelled by the spirit of Yahweh, she roused her countrymen to fight (4<sup>6f.</sup> 5<sup>12</sup>), and in his name promised them victory. We may compare the German Velede, who instigated and supported Civilis in the attempt to throw off the Roman yoke,† and, in more modern times, Joan of Arc.* — Wife of Lapidoth] cf. 2 K. 22<sup>14</sup> Ex. 15<sup>20</sup> Lu. 2<sup>36</sup>. The name has given occasion to all manner of conceits, among which we need only mention that which finds in Lapidoth ('torches, flashes' †) another name of Barak ('lightning'). ‡ — Was judging Israel] so the verb is interpreted in v.<sup>5</sup>; the latter verse is, however, secondary. In the connexion of the original narrative (v.<sup>4,6</sup>) we should render, in accordance with the constant usage of the book, she delivered Israel, vindicated it; see on 3<sup>10</sup>. — 5. A circumstantial addition by a latter editor, who took the verb in v.<sup>4</sup> in the sense of 'judge, give judicial decisions,' describing the way in which she exercised her judicial functions: she did not, like Samuel (1 S. 7<sup>16f.</sup> §), go on a circuit, but the Israelites from all quarters resorted to her at her home. — She used to sit under the Deborah Palm] as arbitress, to settle disputes (v.<sup>b</sup> cf. 1 S. 22<sup>6</sup>). ¶ Others, she dwelt under it (cf. 2 K. 22<sup>14</sup>); ¶ but it is unlikely that the author represented even the prophetess-judge as having her house or tent beneath the holy tree. There was a Tomb of Deborah below Bethel (Gen. 35<sup>8</sup> E), where, according to the ancestral legend, Deborah the nurse of Rebekah was buried. The name of the Mourning Tree (Allon-bacuth) under which it stood was explained of the mourning for Deborah. This tree is in all probability the same with the Deborah Palm,** the origin of whose name the writer evidently connects with Deborah, the prophetess and judge. This association of names is probably responsible for the idea that Deborah's home was in the heart of the mountains of Ephraim. From 5<sup>15</sup> it would appear that she was of the tribe of Issachar; and both ch. 4 and 5 naturally lead us to think that her home was in or near the plain of Jezreel. The conjecture is then not remote that it was at Daberath (Δαβειρωθ, Δαβειρα) Jos. 19<sup>12</sup> 21<sup>28</sup>, the modern

4<sup>17a</sup>. The words of Deborah are generally understood to be a reproof of Barak's lack of faith and courage. Instead of accepting with alacrity the divine mandate, he insisted that she, a woman, should take the field with him; as a penalty, the glory which he should have gained by the death of Sisera is taken from him and given to a woman.* This interpretation is not, however, required by the text or suggested by the context, in which there is no sign of disapproval. That Sisera did not fall on the field, but was killed in his flight by Jael, was a well-established feature of the story; it is natural that the author should make the prophetess foretell this at the outset, and unnecessary to construe the prediction as even an implicit condemnation. It is not at all clear that the writer regarded Barak's urgent desire to have the prophetess with him as blameworthy. — She went with Barak to Kedesh] where he mustered his clans. As the story now stands, she accompanied him from the vicinity of Bethel to Kedesh in Naphtali, a journey of four or five days. There is no great intrinsic improbability in this; but it is very likely, on other grounds, that in the original form of the narrative the homes of the two leaders were not so far apart.

6. Kedesh of Naphtali †] also called Kedesh of Galilee, to distinguish it from other places of the same name (Kadesh or Kedesh, i.e. Holy Place). Kadesh on the Orontes has already been mentioned (see on 3<sup>9</sup>). 1 Chr. 6<sup>67</sup> (EV. 6<sup>72</sup>), in a list of Levitical cities, names a Kedesh in Issachar, in conjunction with Daberath (Debūriyeh); and We. (Comp., p. 221) and others have conjectured that in the redaction of our story this has been confused with the more famous place of the name in Naphtali; but the corresponding list in Jos. 21<sup>28</sup> (cf. 19<sup>20</sup>) gives the name Kishion. There is a Tell Abū Qudeis on the southern side of the Great Plain, midway between Ta'annuk and Leggūn, about a mile north of the road between them, which is perhaps the Kedesh of Issachar, and a Khirbet Qadish near the southern end of the Sea of Galilee, in the territory of Naphtali. — הלא ציה] Jos. 1<sup>9</sup> Ru. 2<sup>9</sup>. It may here be merely a check to extravagant expectations; it is not necessary to supply in thought, “in consequence of my going” (Ki., al.).—[לא יהיה תפארתך] lit. thy glory—that which is naturally anticipated from success in such an enterprise—will not come, be achieved (Schm., Ba.). The interpretation, the fame will not be thine (victoria non reputabitur tibi L; Lth., Stud., Reuss, Kitt., al. mu.), is too free, and accentuates too strongly the antithesis between this and the following clause.

10-16. The battle; rout of the Canaanites.—10. In accordance with Deborah’s direction (v.<sup>6</sup>), Barak assembled the tribes of Zebulun and Naphtali at Kedesh.—There went up at his back ten thousand men] of these tribes. Lit. at his feet; cf. 8<sup>5</sup> Ex. 11<sup>8</sup> 1 K. 20<sup>10</sup> &c.—And Deborah went with him] to Mt. Tabor (v.<sup>12</sup>). The words probably belong to the old story of Sisera; see on v.<sup>9</sup>.—11. The narrator pauses here, before going on to describe the battle, to say what was necessary about the scene of Sisera’s death; where Heber’s tent was pitched, and how these Kenite nomads came to be so far in the north, in order that the story might not be interrupted in its midcourse by these explanations. The verse is therefore in a suitable place,* and not superfluous by the side of v.<sup>17</sup>; there is no reason for regarding it as an addition of the last editor.† It seems, however, to have come from the story of Jabin; see below. The words, the sons of Hobab, Moses’ father-in-law, may be a gloss borrowed from 1<sup>16</sup> or the source of ch. 1; but the Kenite is original here.‡ —Heber the Kenite had separated from Kain] from the body of his tribe, which roamed in the region south of Judah; see on 1<sup>16</sup>. § Heber occurs also as

The place is named in Jos. 19<sup>33</sup> on the boundary of Naphtali, but in a connexion which does not enable us to determine its situation. † Heber the Kenite appears, therefore, to belong originally to the story of Jabin; see below on v. 17 and 5<sup>24</sup>. — 12 f. Sisera, being informed of Barak's movements, assembles his forces, including nine hundred iron chariots (v. 3. 7 1<sup>19</sup>), and marches from Harosheth to the Kishon. — Harosheth ha-goyim] commonly explained, "the Harosheth of the (foreign) nations"; cf. Gelil ha-goyim, Is. 8<sup>23</sup> 9<sup>1</sup>; possibly in distinction from a neighbouring Israelite Harosheth. ‡ The place is mentioned only in this chapter (v. 2. 13. 16). It must be sought, not in the vicinity of Hazor, § or elsewhere in Upper Galilee, || but in or near the Plain, where alone the chariots would be an effective arm; cf. Jos. 17<sup>16-18</sup> Jud. 1<sup>19</sup>. Thomson ¶ identified it with the modern Tell Harothieh (Ḥārithiyeh), in the narrows of the Kishon valley commanding the entrance to the Great Plain from the Plain of Acre. The similarity of the names is more striking than conclusive; but the situation is not unsuitable, though somewhat remote. ** — The Kishon valley] v. 7 5<sup>21</sup> 1 K. 18<sup>40</sup> Ps. 83<sup>9†</sup>. Tabor.* It is the latter that is meant here. — 14. Deborah gives the signal for the attack, and the assurance of victory.† Budde, comparing 3<sup>28</sup> (Jos. 10<sup>8. 25</sup> 8<sup>18a</sup>), suspects that 14<sup>a</sup> is an addition of D, which in turn has become the occasion of secondary additions in G in v.<sup>8</sup>. The verse is, however, in entire accord with the relations between the prophetess and the chieftain in v.<sup>6f</sup>, and in form corresponds closely to v.<sup>6</sup>. — Hath not Yahweh gone out before thee? the question, as in v.<sup>6</sup>, a more forcible assertion. Gone out; to battle, as often, see note on 2<sup>15</sup> (p. 73). Yahweh is a mighty warrior (Ex. 15<sup>3</sup> Ps. 24<sup>8</sup>); his name is Yahweh of hosts, the god of the embattled ranks of Israel (1 S. 17<sup>45</sup>); in the sacred chest (ark) he accompanies them to the field (1 S. 4); he marches out for them, or with them, to battle (Hab. 3<sup>13</sup> Zech. 14<sup>3</sup> cf. Ps. 44<sup>9</sup>); or comes storming from his ancient seats in tempestuous fury, discomfiting the foe and delivering his people (5<sup>4f</sup>; see comm. there). — Barak, with his ten thousand men, rushed down to the plain, by his sudden onset apparently surprising Sisera upon ground unfavourable to the manœuvring of his chariots, which thus became a source of disorder and disaster. During Vespasian's campaign in Galilee (A.D. 67) the Jews, who had fortified the summit of Tabor, attempted to surprise the Roman cavalry in the plain under Placidus, but through his ruse the enterprise miscarried. ‡ — 15. Yahweh routed Sisera] struck the foe with panic, threw them into confusion and flight; Ex. 14<sup>24</sup> Jos. 10<sup>10</sup> 1 S. 7<sup>10</sup>. § Josephus supposes that their discomfiture was caused by a great storm (cf. 5<sup>20f</sup>). — All the army] v.<sup>16</sup> Ex. 14<sup>24</sup> &c.; cf. other expressions v.<sup>7. 13</sup>; the mass of footmen in distinction from the chariot corps. — At the point of the sword] see note on 1<sup>25</sup>. 10. יויעל is not Hiph. (Ki., Schm.), but Qal; the subj. is not Barak (L., al.), but "ten thousand men" (טעס). The sg. with plur. numeral subj. is unusual; Ex. 32<sup>28</sup> Jud. 7<sup>8</sup> 12<sup>6</sup> 1 S. 4<sup>10</sup> 2 S. 24<sup>16</sup> are not precisely similar. It is perhaps only accidental; an abbreviation not properly resolved. — 11. נפרד Gen. 13<sup>9</sup>. 11. 14 cf. 10<sup>5</sup>. 32. — אלוך בצענים Baer אלוך, as also in 12<sup>11</sup>. 12. Jud., S., Mas., Drus., Schm., Cler., AV., RV., and most moderns), in Sa'anīm; for in that case אלוך would require the article, as in האשל ברמה 1 S. 22<sup>6</sup> 31<sup>13</sup>; cf. also Jud. 6<sup>11</sup> בצענים אשר בעפרה 9<sup>6</sup> Gen. 35<sup>4</sup> Jos. 24<sup>26</sup> &c. We must, therefore, take בצענים (נ radical) as genitive; cf. v.<sup>5</sup> Gen. 12<sup>6</sup> 13<sup>18</sup> 14<sup>6</sup> 35<sup>8</sup> Dt. 11<sup>30</sup> 1 S. 10<sup>3</sup> and esp. Jud. 9<sup>37</sup> מעוננים אלוך. In Jos. 19<sup>33</sup> the name is written בצעננים, to which the Qerē in Jud. 4<sup>11</sup> conforms. It is more probable, however, that the true form of the name is preserved in the text of Jud. (Kethib); cf. כנענים; and on nouns with n suffix in general, Barth, Nominalbildung, p. 343 f.; Suyūṭī, Muzhir, ii. p. 136. — אלוך the punctuation discriminates אלוך, אלוך, אלוך from אלוך, אלוך; but in unpunctuated texts these could not be distinguished, nor can we put much confidence in the constancy of the traditional pronunciation in face of the bewildering inconsistency of the versions. Celsus (Hierobotanicon, i. p. 34 ff.) thought that the Massorites consistently distinguish 'terebinth' (אלוך, אלוך, אלוך) from 'oak' (אלוך), and this theory has been generally accepted, though with no agreement in the distribution of the names; see J. D. Michaelis, Supplementa, p. 72 ff.; Rosenmüller, Bibl. Alterthumsk., iv. p. 229 ff.; Ges. Thes. p. 50 f.* There is no real foundation for the discrimination; the words signify in Aramaic 'tree' simply; in Hebrew usually, if not exclusively, 'holy tree,' as the place, and primitively the object of worship,

The Kishon at this point flows close to the rocky base of Carmel, on the opposite side of the pass, and here the main road must always have crossed the river. A stronghold at Hārithiyeh would thus command the entrance to the Great Plain from the Plain of Acre, and the commercial highways which led through it. The situation of el-Hārithiyeh is not incompatible with the conditions of the narrative in ch. 4, or with ch. 5; but the arguments by which Thomson supported the identification are far from decisive, and the similarity of the names may easily be accidental. — 14. קוּם Up! 17-22. The death of Sisera. — 17. Sisera escapes on foot to the tent of Jael. From v.<sup>17a</sup>, especially when taken with v.<sup>22</sup>, it is obvious that the narrator represented the tent of Jael as not very remote from the battle field. Verse<sup>17b</sup>, on the other hand, taken with v.<sup>11</sup>, carries us to the vicinity of Hazor and Kedesh (in Naphtali, v.<sup>6</sup>), forty or fifty miles away. The most probable solution of the difficulty appears to be the supposition that Heber the Kenite originally belonged to the story of Jabin; Jael, to that of Sisera. In that case v.<sup>17aa</sup> is derived from the latter source, v.<sup>17b</sup> from the former. The words, the wife of the Heber of Kenite, are possibly from the same source as v.<sup>17b</sup>, and the conjecture may be hazarded that in the story of Jabin the wife of Heber played a part similar to that of Jael in the story of Sisera; see above, p. 109.* The alternative is to regard v.<sup>11</sup> and v.<sup>17b</sup> as editorial additions; but we should then still have to ask whence the editor had the names and why he introduced them here; moreover, the editor (R) calls Jabin king of Canaan, not king of Hazor. — There were friendly relations between Jabin king of Hazor and Heber the Kenite] the nomads had not been victims of the oppression from which the Israelite peasants had suffered, and had not taken part in the rising of Naphtali. In the present connexion the words explain why Sisera fled to the tent of Jael. — 18. Jael came out to meet him, as she saw him approaching. — Walk in, my lord; walk in to my tent; have no fear] cf. Gen. 19<sup>1f</sup>. Unlike v.<sup>17b</sup>, the natural inference from these words is, not that Sisera directed his steps to these tents to seek refuge in them, but that he came upon them in his flight and was induced by Jael to turn aside and conceal himself there. The illustrations which the commentators have collected of the ceremonies with which a fugitive now claims protection at an Arab tent are in either case irrelevant.† — She covered him up with the rug] or perhaps, tent curtain. The exact meaning of the word is unknown; the renderings proposed can only claim to be suitable to the context. — 19. Give me a little drink of water] Gen. 24<sup>43</sup> (J). — She opened the milk-skin] the lamb or goat skin in which

milk was kept, and poured him a drink into a bowl (cf. 5<sup>26</sup>).* Her hospitality exceeded his modest request (cf. 5<sup>25</sup>). His confidence was naturally confirmed by this token of friendliness. — And covered him] again. We miss the adverb in Hebrew as much as in English. — 20. He bids her stand at the door of the tent to put the pursuit off the track, if it should come that way. Then, overcome by weariness, he gives himself up to the sense of security and falls asleep. It is quite needless to ascribe to the draught an intoxicating or stupefying quality.† — 21. When he was sound asleep, Jael took one of the pins with which the tent ropes are fastened to the ground (Is. 33<sup>20</sup>), and a hammer, and stealthily crept to his side where he lay in the inner part of the tent. The tent pin was not of metal ‡ — the bronze pins of the tabernacle belong to the luxury of that structure — but, as still in the tents of the Bedawin, of wood.§ The hammer was probably the mallet with which the tent pins were driven. Among the Bedawin pitching the tent is woman's business, and so no doubt it was in ancient times; the mallet and pin were accustomed implements, and ready at hand. || — And drove the pin into his temple so that it went down into the ground] transfixing his head. — He being sound asleep and exhausted] circumstantial clause, explaining how it was possible for her to kill him in this way; see note. It was certainly an unusual way, and more ingenious than sure; a blow of the mallet upon the temple was a much simpler and safer plan than to try to drive the blunt wooden pin through his head. Wellhausen ingeniously conjectures that this description of Sisera's death originated in a prosaic misunderstanding of the poetic parallelism in 5<sup>26</sup>.¶ This is not improbable, though the obscurity of the terms in 5<sup>26</sup> forbids too confident assertion; but we should not be warranted in inferring that the author of ch. 4 is also the author of this misunderstanding.** — 22. Lo, there was Barak] he came up at that instant; the particle calls attention to the striking

If, with Conder and Smith, we look for Kedesh and Heber's encampment by the Sea of Galilee at Qadish and Bessūm, the identification of Harosheth with el-Hārithiyeh will have to be given up, not only as incompatible with v.<sup>16</sup>, but as altogether too remote from the scene of action. Tell Abū Qudeis (? Kedesh of Issachar; cf. above, p. 117), between Ta'annuk and Leggūn, lies in the direction of Hārithiyeh, and (again assuming that H. is Harosheth) would suit v.<sup>17a</sup>.<sup>18ff</sup> well enough; but it cannot be the Kedesh of v.<sup>17b</sup> cf. <sup>11</sup> (Heber the friend of Jabin of Hazor). On the whole, therefore, we do not gain much by trying to substitute another place of the name for Kedesh in Naphtali.

The morality of Jael's deed, even more than that of Ehud, has been the subject of great searchings of heart among the apologists who have felt it necessary to judge it by the standard of absolute ethics, and to justify it in that forum. That the inspired prophetess should extol Jael for what, in all the circumstances, bears the appearance of a treacherous murder (5<sup>24</sup> cf. 23. 31), is, of course, the greatest difficulty of all. We need not follow these interpreters into the morasses of casuistry into which an unhistorical idea of religion and revelation leads them. To justify the deed by the standards of Christian morality, it is necessary to lower those standards to the level of the deed. See Abarb., a Lap., Schm. (qu. 16), and esp. The Song of Deborah is an epinikian ode celebrating the victory of the Israelites over the Canaanites near Taanach. After an opening strain of praise to Yahweh for the great deliverance (v.<sup>2-5</sup>) the poet describes the state of things which preceded and provoked the war (v.<sup>6-8</sup>). Verse<sup>12</sup>, with its invocation of Deborah and Barak, leads over to the Israelite rising; the tribes which took part in the glorious struggle receive their meed of praise (v.<sup>14. 15a. 18</sup>), while reproaches and taunts are heaped upon those which held aloof (v.<sup>15b-17</sup>). Then follows the battle itself and the rout of the foe (v.<sup>19-22</sup>), and the death of the flying king by the hand of Jael (v.<sup>24-27</sup>). The anxiety of Sisera's mother as his return is delayed, the expectation of triumph and spoil, which is raised again only to be more cruelly disappointed, form the tragic climax of the poem (v.<sup>28-30</sup>), which ends with the strain :

"So perish all thine enemies, O Yahweh!"

The movement of the poem is throughout straightforward and natural. It sets before us, first, the situation before the revolt; second, the rising of the tribes; third, the victory and its sequel, the death of Sisera. Notwithstanding many obscurities in particulars, especially in v.<sup>13-15</sup>, the main tenor of the narrative from v.<sup>12</sup> on is sufficiently clear. The same is true of v.<sup>2-7</sup>, but in the intervening verses (<sup>8-11</sup>) the difficulties are so accumulated that it is hardly possible to be sure even of the general sense and connexion of the passage. Verse<sup>9</sup> seems to resume the theme of v.<sup>2</sup>, and the distinctly marked new beginning in v.<sup>12</sup> shows at least that v.<sup>10, 11</sup> must be joined to the preceding. We have then, as the natural divisions, a. v.<sup>2-11</sup>, b. v.<sup>12-18</sup>, c. v.<sup>19-31</sup>. The connexion between b. and c. is, from the nature of the matter, closer than between a. and b., but this is not a sufficient reason for dividing the poem into two, a Hymn of Thanksgiving (v.<sup>2-11</sup>); and the Triumphal Ode (v.<sup>12-31</sup>).* On the contrary, v.<sup>2-11</sup> form the natural and indispensable introduction to the Ode.

The obscurity of the middle of the ode was remarked by Lowth.† It is of quite a different nature from the difficulties which we encounter in the opening verses and in the latter half of the chapter. These are due to our defective knowledge of its very ancient poetical language, and affect particular words or phrases without preventing our understanding the general meaning of the passage. In v.<sup>8-15</sup>, on the other hand, while clauses here and there are plain enough, the whole is unintelligible; as is superabundantly proved by the translations which are given by the commentators. We cannot lay this obscurity to the charge of the author, who in the other parts of the poem writes clearly and directly, but must infer that by some accident of transmission

* Ewald, Dichter d. A. B., i. p. 186 ff. Ewald supposes that the Ode was composed for a different occasion from the Hymn; viz., for the triumphal procession "perhaps on the evening of the same day."

† De sacra poesi Hebraeorum, p. 274: "Media, ut verum fateamur, obsederunt haud exiguae obscuritates, multum officientes Carminis pulchritudini, nec facile dissipandae, nisi uberior historiae lux accederet."

these verses have suffered peculiarly. It would seem that, in a manuscript through which our text is descended, this place had become in good part illegible. The scribe who copied it made out as much as he could, but was not always successful in recovering the vanished letters. The obscurity of the text thus established would naturally become a fresh source of corruption. This corruption is in the main older than the Greek translators, who in the worst places read substantially as we do and therefore give us little help toward a restoration of the text.*

Critics have been almost unanimous in attributing the Ode to a contemporary, and a participant in the glorious struggle which it celebrates. So, to make but a single quotation, Kuenen writes, "Form and contents alike prove that it is rightly ascribed by all competent judges to a contemporary."† This consensus has recently been challenged by Seinecke‡ and especially by Maurice Vernes,§ but neither the methods nor the conclusions of these critics have commended themselves to other scholars.

Seinecke, whose work in general is marred by a perverse fondness for paradoxes, gathers from v.<sup>31</sup> that the ode was not written to celebrate the victory over Sisera at all; but, like Ex. 15, to encourage the author's contemporaries by reminding them of the great deeds of Yahweh in long by-gone days, when the enemies of Israel were so fearfully punished that not one of them was left. The idea of Yahweh's coming from Edom (v.<sup>4</sup>) is inconceivable in ancient times, it is parallel to Is. 63 and refers to a future parousia; the colossal exaggeration of v.<sup>20</sup>, "They fought from heaven, the stars in their courses fought against Sisera," corresponds to the notions of later times, and is to be compared with Jos. 10<sup>12-14</sup>; v.<sup>6</sup> (Jael a judge) and v.<sup>14</sup> ("Ephraim, whose root is in Amalek," cf. 12<sup>15</sup>) contain mistakes which a contemporary could not make. The language exhibits Aramaisms and other marks of late date, especially the relative w; the style is artificial; v.<sup>10</sup>, for example, is "a frigid conceit of post-exilic times," reminding us of the beginning of Ps. 1. Finally, the names of Barak, Lapidoth, and perhaps Deborah have an unhistorical ring. "We are forced to conclude, therefore, that the story of the conflict of Barak and Jael against Jabin and Sisera is a bit of old Hebrew mythology, in which the cleansing and purifying powers of nature, thunder, lightning, and flame, are arrayed against the mist and clouds." * Vernes † contests the common opinion that the poem, compared with the prose narrative (ch. 4), has preserved a number of historical details and bears the fresh impress of the events. On the contrary, though the prose story is late and exhibits numerous inconsistencies, it is drawn from older sources, and is infinitely superior to the poem. In the former, only two tribes take part in the struggle; in the latter this is exaggerated to a national movement, all Israel is oppressed, almost all Israel unites against the foe. Vague and inaccurate phrases such as "new gods" (v.<sup>8</sup>), "the kings of Canaan" (v.<sup>19</sup>), "the times of Jael" (v.<sup>6</sup>), point to a date remote from the events. Moreover, besides ch. 4, the author has made use of other writings which are themselves late. The names of Taanach and Megiddo (v.<sup>19</sup>) are taken from Jud. 12<sup>7</sup> or Jos. 12<sup>21</sup>, that of Meroz ‡ perhaps from the same passage in Jos.; the representation of Dan as settled on the seaboard (v.<sup>17</sup>) can only come from the unhistorical partition of Palestine in Jos. The poem must, therefore, be later than the latest stratum of Jos. "If the prose narrative is not older than the 5th cent. B.C., the song put into the mouth of the prophetess-judge may without hesitation be dated a century or a century and a half later." M. Vernes' final estimate shall be given in his own words: "Nous disons donc du chant du Débora que c'est une œuvre éminemment artificielle, dont quelques tirades éloquentes ou brillantes ne peuvent pas dissimuler le vide." In his later articles in the Revue des études juives, M. Vernes reiterates this criticism at length, in connexion with an exposition of the chapter, and adds an elaborate argument from the language of the poem, which, so far from being archaic, is paralleled throughout by that of the Ketubim, and often only there; so that the linguistic evidence also brings the Song of Deborah into the company of the latest books of the O.T. § It is impossible here to examine this argument in detail; so far as it seems worth while, we shall take notice of his observa-

* A mythical interpretation was earlier given to the poem by Steintal ("Die Sage von Simson," Zeitschrift für Völkerpsychologie, u.s.w., ii. 1862, p. 164), who finds in Deborah and Jael the beneficent rain-clouds, in Barak the lightning. tions on the usage in the critical notes below. Here it can only be said in general that, so far as M. Vernes accurately states the facts, they do not justify his conclusions. But philological ἀκρίβεια is not M. Vernes' strong point, and his statements are frequently most deceptive half-truths. For example, "garaph (v.<sup>21</sup>) s'explique par l'araméen," suggests that גרף in this sense is a distinctively Aramaic word, whereas the use of the word in the Song has much closer parallels in Arabic.

The representations of the Song agree entirely with the historical situation, so far as we are able from our very scanty materials to reconstruct it. We detect in it none of the anachronisms by which a later writer so easily betrays his own age; * nor does the atmospheric perspective of the narrative indicate that the writer stood at a distance from the events which he relates. It exhibits neither the vagueness which is the first result of the blurring of details in tradition, nor the artificial circumstantiality which marks the subsequent attempt to recover them.† The impression of reality which we receive from the Ode is hardly to be paralleled in another poem in the Old Testament; and a comparison with others, especially with the Song of Moses (Ex. 15), the subject of which has the greatest resemblance to the Song of Deborah, strengthens this impression.‡ These considerations have of course no weight with those to whom the poem is "an eminently artificial work," the rhetoric of which is sometimes ingenious and eloquent, sometimes strained and affected. § Against such æsthetic judgements there is no arguing.

The priority of the Ode to the prose narrative in ch. 4, and its superiority in point of historical truth, appear from the comparison instituted above in the Introduction to ch. 4 (p. 107 f.). It is especially clear in the accounts of Sisera's death, 4<sup>18-22</sup> 5<sup>24-27</sup>. See further the commentary on the last named verses.

* As when, for example, in the "Song of Moses" (Ex. 15) Israel is already established in Canaan (v.<sup>13ff.</sup>), and — unless v.<sup>17b.</sup> be rejected as an interpolation — the temple in Jerusalem already built.

† The indefiniteness of which Vernes complains is chiefly obscurity arising from corruption of the text or context. He appears never to suspect the Massoretic text nor the translation which he finds in the popular commentaries.

‡ The inference from the impression of reality to the contemporary origin or the historical truth of a narrative is not stringent. It is the pre-eminent gift of the poet to create this impression even when his story conflicts with our knowledge; — think of Homer, Dante, Shakespeare. But the objective character of the art which is capable of producing such an illusion is not easily exemplified among Semitic poets. It is a simpler and more probable explanation in the present case, that the poem was made by one under the immediate inspiration of the events, than that it is a supreme work of the creative imagination.

In the opinion of the great majority of scholars, Deborah herself is the author of the Ode.* It is attributed to her in the title (v.<sup>1</sup>), which, however, since we do not know how ancient this superscription is, and since in other cases the titles are frequently in error,† cannot by itself be regarded as decisive. Here the title seems to be distinctly confirmed by v.<sup>7</sup>, "until I, Deborah, arose; till I arose, a matron in Israel." Unfortunately, this evidence is not as conclusive as it seems; ¶ and § have the verbs in the third person, "until Deborah arose," and even in ¶ the form of the verbs is ambiguous, and may equally well be rendered, "until thou didst arise, Deborah." § The latter interpretation accords with v.<sup>12</sup>, "Awake, awake, Deborah; awake, awake, deliver a song," which the parallel half verse, "Arise, arise, Barak," &c., forbids us to take as the self-invocation of the poet. In v.<sup>15</sup>, again, Deborah is spoken of in the third person. The natural and almost necessary inference from these verses is that Deborah herself is not the author of the Ode. || The other indications of her authorship which commentators have found in the words of the song are indecisive; in some of them the text is insecure, in others the interpretation. Much has sometimes been made of the so-called psychological evidence; the recital of Jael's deed (v.<sup>24-27</sup>) and the description of the scene in Sisera's palace (v.<sup>28-30</sup>), it is said, could only have been written by a woman.¶ This is a matter which hardly admits of argument, but it is certainly a false note when Bertheau finds in the reference to Sisera's mother a touch of woman's sympathy.**

The historical value of the Song of Deborah can hardly be exaggerated. It is the oldest extant monument of Hebrew literature, and the only contemporaneous monument of Hebrew history before the foundation of the kingdom. When we compare the situation of the tribes, as it appears in the poem, with the fragmentary traditions of the invasion and settlement in ch. 1, we see that Israel had in the meantime established itself more securely in the land. The Highlands of Ephraim seem to be completely in the possession of Joseph, and we may infer from the part taken in the struggle by Issachar, Zebulun, and Naphtali, that the latter tribes, too, had gained a firmer footing in Galilee, while Issachar had probably already planted itself on both sides of the narrow valley which at the eastern end of the Plain separates the hills on the north and south. The Canaanites, however, were still masters of the Plain; their fortified cities commanded the passes which entered, and the roads which traversed it; their formidable chariotry kept the Highland footmen on either hand in awe (cf. Jos. 17<sup>16-18</sup>). With increasing numbers and strength, it was inevitable that the Israelites should turn their eyes to the fertile fields and rich traffic of the Plain. After a period probably of peaceful expansion, the Canaanite city-kings, alarmed perhaps at the steady encroachments of Israel, took the aggressive. They blockaded the main roads and cut off communication; from their cities they sent out bands and harried the country, so that the unwallled villages were deserted.*

Incited by Deborah, most of the Israelite tribes concertedly took up arms to put an end to this intolerable state of things. From the south of the Plain came the three branches of Joseph, Ephraim, Benjamin and Machir; from the north Zebulun, Issachar and Naphtali. Each tribe and clan was led by its own chiefs, who are repeatedly mentioned with especial honour. The united forces were commanded by Barak, a chief of Issachar, or perhaps of Naphtali.† The Israelites east of the Jordan, Reuben and Gilead (Gad), were also summoned by Deborah's emissaries, but either did not respond at all or dallied irresolute till the time for action was over; nor did the more remote northern tribes, Dan and Asher, join in the rising. In the Ode these tribes are bitterly reproached for their selfish indifference to the cause of Israel, and their conduct is contrasted with the alacrity with which Zebulun and Naphtali braved the dangers of the field. When Israel is arrayed in arms against Canaan, every tribe and clan is bound to come to the support of Yahweh among the valiant warriors.*

We see from this that the Israelite tribes, although separated and to some extent broken up in the invasion and settlement of Palestine and the transition from nomadic to agricultural life with all its profound changes, felt themselves to be one people. This consciousness must have come down from a time when the tribes were more closely united than they were in the first centuries of their settlement in Canaan. But it does not spring solely from the fact that they were, or believed themselves to be, of one race, or from the memory of the days in which they had wandered and fought side by side; it has a deeper root in their religion. Israel is the people of Yahweh (v.<sup>11.13</sup>); its enemies are his enemies (v.<sup>21</sup>); its victories, his victories (v.<sup>11</sup>).† To him the enthusiasm with which chiefs and people offered themselves for the holy war is gratefully ascribed (v.<sup>2.9</sup>); † the oracle pronounces his curse on the villagers of Meroz for not coming bravely to his aid. The whole Ode is a triumphal Te Deum to Yahweh, Israel's God.

Yahweh was not a god of Canaan, whose worship Israel, in settling in the land and learning to till the soil, had adopted from the natives, but the god of the invaders, by whose help they conquered Canaan. His seats were in the distant south, whence he comes to succour his people and discomfit their foes, "going forth to war from Seir, marching from the region of Edom." Thither, long after the time of Deborah, Elijah journeyed through the desert to the old holy mountain, where he found Yahweh (1 Ki. 19). It is the old and constant tradition, that at this holy mountain Israel solemnly adopted the religion of Yahweh. This coincides with the implications of the poem noted above, and explains, as hardly anything else could, the strength of the religious feeling and the consciousness of religious unity which express themselves in the Ode. The indirect confirmation which is thus given to the tradition that connects the beginnings of the religion of Israel, the great work of Moses, with the holy mountain (Horeb, Sinai) is of no slight weight.

The battle was fought near Taanach and Megiddo (v.<sup>19</sup>), on the southern side of the Plain. The Canaanite city-kings of these

* For this reason it is very significant that Judah is not named at all. It is difficult to avoid the inference that the poet did not count it among the tribes of Israel. It was originally a small tribe, which grew into importance by union with clans of different stock (Caleb, &c.), and it was separated from Joseph by a Canaanite belt (see above, p. 8); but these things hardly account for its absence from the song. Simeon and Levi are also wanting; Reuben is the only one of the older, southern group of Leah-tribes that is named.

† So, at least, these verses are generally understood.

and neighbouring cities, relying on their chariots and their superiority in arms, gave battle in the open field. Their leader, Sisera, was doubtless the king of one of these cities; and the glimpse of his court and harem which is given us in v.<sup>28-30</sup> shows that he was a powerful and opulent prince. The Israelites were able to raise forty thousand men.* They were peasants from the hills, and were armed only with peasants' weapons; a regular military equipment was hardly to be found among them (v.<sup>8</sup>). The Canaanites were routed; the treacherous Kishon, perhaps swollen by a sudden flood, with its marshes and holes, completed their ruin. Sisera, in his flight, passed by the village of Meroz (?), whose Israelite inhabitants suffered him to escape.† At the door of Jael's tent he halts to beg a drink of water; she gives him a great bowl of milk, and, as he buries his face in it in his thirst and haste, fells him with a blow that crushes in his skull.

The results of the war are unknown to us. It is hardly probable that Israel took from the Canaanites any of their strong cities, but the power and prestige of the Canaanites and their terrible chariots received a severe blow.‡ The union of Yahweh's people at the call of Deborah in a holy war must have done much to strengthen the feeling of oneness in race and religion, and their success have deepened their faith in Yahweh of armies, the god of the embattled ranks of Israel. Thus the victory in the plain of Megiddo foreshadowed and prepared the way for the kingdom of Saul and David.

The Song of Deborah is unsurpassed in Hebrew literature in all the great qualities of poetry, and holds a high place among Triumphal Odes in the literature of the world. It is a work of genius, and therefore a work of that highest art which is not studied and artificial, but spontaneous and inevitable. It shows a development and command of the resources of the language for ends of poetical expression which prove that poetry had long been cultivated among the Hebrews. Few fragments of this earlier poetry have come down to us ; probably few survived to the centuries with which our Hebrew literature begins, but we cannot doubt that the nomadic forefathers of Israel took the same keen delight in lyric poetry which is so strongly marked a trait of the Arabs.*

* This is a round number, and naturally not below the mark. Whether the total fighting strength of Israel is meant, or that of the tribes engaged, is a question which can hardly be answered.

The form of the Ode has received much attention from students of Hebrew poetry, and many attempts have been made to reduce it to metre and divide it into regular strophes.† Some of these schemes are very ingenious ; but those of them which adhere more closely to the Massoretic text are so irregular that the terms metre and strophe seem to be misapplied, while those which achieve greater regularity do so by more or less violent operations upon the text. They help us very little to a better understanding of the poem, and can only with great caution be used as a canon for the emendation of its obscure and corrupt places. All that can safely be said is that the principal pauses in the poem are after v.<sup>11</sup> and v.<sup>22</sup>, and that the prevailing rhythm of the poem has four beats to the line.

1. And Deborah sang, and Barak] cf. Ex. 15<sup>1</sup>. The title was probably prefixed by the editor who incorporated the poem in his Book of Judges, and expresses his opinion that the Ode was composed by Deborah, and sung in celebration of the victory. The grammatical construction makes it not impossible that the words and Barak are an addition by a later hand, suggested by the apostrophe in v.<sup>12b</sup>. ‡ — On that day] the day of victory ; there is no reason to think that the writer meant the words in the looser sense, at that time (cf. Jer. 7<sup>22</sup> 34<sup>13</sup> &c.), nor can they be understood of

* It is an erroneous inference, however, that there must have been an extensive poetical literature before Deborah. Early poetry was not preserved in books, but in the breasts of men. It is quite possible that the Song of Deborah itself was thus perpetuated for generations ; though we do not need to invoke the aid of this hypothesis to explain the state of the text, and cannot admit it as a warrant for a radical reconstruction of the poem, such as is attempted by Niebuhr.

a subsequent celebration of the triumph or commemoration of the victory. But, as we have seen above (p. 132), Deborah was probably not the author of the poem, and it certainly bears none of the marks of improvisation. Nor is there any evidence in the Song itself that it was sung by Deborah, alone or with Barak.*

2, 3. Exordium.† — The poet announces his theme. — 2. The meaning of the two essential words in the first half-verse is obscure. Most recent interpreters adopt the rendering of some of the Greek translators: For the leading of the leaders in Israel, for the volunteering of the people, praise ye Yahweh.‡ The poet, according to this interpretation, calls upon his hearers to praise God that chieftains were found to head the rising of the clans, and that the people nobly responded to their call. This gives a good parallelism between the two members, and the whole corresponds in sense to v.<sup>9</sup> (the marshals of Israel, the volunteers among the people). The meaning ascribed to the words biphērōā' pērā'ōth, however, rests only on very insecure etymological conjecture, and is exposed to grave, if not insuperable, grammatical difficulties. The translation of the second clause shares the uncertainty which attaches to the parallel first clause, though all the words are familiar; cf. 2 Chr. 17<sup>16</sup> Ps. 110<sup>3</sup>. — Bless ye Yahweh] render him grateful homage, magnify him. — 3. The rulers of the nations are summoned to hearken to the praises of Yahweh. The poet would make the world a witness of Yahweh's mighty acts and compel it to own his greatness; cf. Dt. 32<sup>1, 3</sup>. — Hear, ye kings; give ear, ye potentates] the two verbs are often coupled in poetical parallelism; cf. Gen. 4<sup>23</sup> Ex. 15<sup>26</sup> Nu. 23<sup>18</sup> &c.; the two nouns also occur together, Ps. 2<sup>2</sup> Hab. 1<sup>10</sup>. The words are addressed to the rulers of the nations of the world, so far as they were within the horizon of the poet's contemporaries; they shall learn the great might of Yahweh and his jealousy for his people Israel. — I, to Yahweh I

* The attempts to distribute the parts of the Song between the two singers, with or without the addition of a Chorus, are very artificial. See, e.g. Fr. Böttcher, Die ältesten Bühnendichtungen, u.s.w., 1850; Donaldson, Jashar, p. 237 ff. Older schemes may be seen in Ba.

will sing] for my part; not I, even I, will sing unto the Lord (EV.), which is doubly unjust to the emphasis of the line. Observe the repetition of the pronoun, which has a weight in Hebrew that we cannot give it in translation. The note of triumph rings in this exaltation of the subject. Most interpreters find in this dominant I the self-consciousness of Deborah, heroine and poet, but for reasons already set forth this is improbable. Wellhausen thinks that the I of this verse, as of Ex. 15, is Israel.*

1. והשר רבורה וברק] Deborah has the leading part; Barak is in an altogether secondary position; cf. Nu. 12<sup>1</sup> Ex. 15<sup>1</sup>. RLbG. and Abarb. (cf. Ephr.) think that by this construction the writer meant to imply that Barak had no part in the composition of the Ode, of which Deborah alone was the author. והשר, from שר med. i; Kð., i. p. 510 f. — 2. וְפָרַע פְּרָעָה וְג' אֶלְמוֹ Θ ἰστὲν τῷ ἀρξασθαι ἀρχηγὸς ἐν Ἰσραήλ, cf. Θ Dt. 32<sup>42</sup>. The intention of the translators is no doubt correctly expressed by Procop., δηλοῖ ἡ ῥῆσις ἐν τῷ ἀρχοντας ἐν τῷ Ἰσραήλ ἀναφαίνεσθαι, καὶ τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῖς ὑπέλκειν ἐκόντα.

פרע is compared with Arab. فَرَعَ 'eminent man' (lit. 'top' cacumen), and the fem. is explained as the so-called intensive fem. (Wright, Arab. Gram., i. p. 157), used esp. in names of callings, titles of respect, and the like; e.g. nassābat, 'consummate genealogist,' allāmat, 'perfect scholar,' &c.; in Heb., perhaps, קַהֲלָה, בִּפְרָת, &c. (Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 122, 4 b); or as one of the words which are fem. in tropical significations (Bö. § 645 cf. 630). ΘBGN ἀπεκαλύθθη ἀποκάλυμμα ἐν Ἰ. (Σ, more clearly, ἐν τῷ ἀνακαλύψασθαι κεφαλὰς) connect the words with פרע Nu. 5<sup>18</sup> Lev. 13<sup>45</sup>, פָּרַע 'head of long hair' Nu. 6<sup>5</sup> Ez. 44<sup>20</sup>. Cass. and Vernes, also, interpret of the wild streaming locks of the warriors who have consecrated themselves to the holy war. † § and ¶ (combined with other interpretations) give the root the sense which it ordinarily has in Syr., Aram., and MH. (but not in BH.), for the retribution, the avenging, of Israel's wrongs; similarly Ki., Abarb., Schm., Köhler, Herder<sup>2</sup>, al. Some modern scholars, starting from the assumed primary meaning 'loose,' render the verb, 'set free, liberate'; so Lth. (das Israel wider frey ist worden), Cler., J. D. Mich., Justi, Stud. Neither of these interpretations is justified by usage, and neither makes a passable parallel to v. ב. — בִּרְךְ] nowhere else takes ב in the sense 'for, on account of'; we should expect עַל (Dt. 8<sup>10</sup>). This difficulty exists equally for all the interpretations recorded above. The more natural rendering of the prep. is with; and we might perhaps translate, with long streaming locks in Israel, with free gifts of the people, praise ye Yahweh, thinking of vows and offerings of gratitude for the victory achieved; or we

4, 5. The awful coming of Yahweh. — After the exordium (v.<sup>2f</sup>) the poet hurries us in medias res and describes the coming of Yahweh from his ancient seats in the South to succour his people. The cause of his coming is exposed in the following verses (v.<sup>6ff</sup>). This is the only natural explanation of v.<sup>4f</sup>; the mention of Sinai in v.<sup>5</sup>, which seems to require a different interpretation, is a gloss. With the description of Yahweh's advent compare Dt. 33<sup>2</sup> Hab. 3<sup>3ff</sup> Ps. 68<sup>7ff</sup>, also 2 S. 22<sup>8ff</sup> (Ps. 18<sup>7ff</sup>) Mi. 1<sup>2-4</sup> Ps. 97<sup>2-5</sup>; cf. Il. xiii. 17-19. — 4. Yahweh, when thou wentest forth from Seir, when thou marchedst from the region of Edom] the words do not refer to the descent of Yahweh upon Mt. Sinai (Ex. 19<sup>16ff</sup>) or Horeb (Dt. 4<sup>10-12</sup> 5<sup>22ff</sup>) at the institution of the religion of Israel.* The imagery bears a certain resemblance to the passages last cited, though only in features common to all such manifestations; but the sublime phenomena which attended the giving of the law have no obvious connexion with the subject of the poem, nor is any suggested by the author. If a contrast had been intended between the great deeds of God for Israel in former days and the recent humiliation,† or a comparison of his intervention in the destruction of Sisera with the prodigies at Sinai,‡ it must have been intimated in some way. After the announcement of the theme in v.<sup>2f</sup> we expect praises of Yahweh for the great deliverance he has just wrought, not an irrelevant historical reminiscence. Finally, Yahweh did not come to Sinai from Seir, from the plateau of Edom (v.<sup>4a</sup>), to give the law; and no plausible or even possible explanation of these words has been proposed by the commentators who interpret v.<sup>4f</sup> of the theophany at Sinai. Others, comparing Dt. 33<sup>2</sup> Hab. 3<sup>3ff.</sup>, refer the verses to earlier wars, such as those against Sihon and Og, in which Yahweh led his people to victory,* or to the whole progress through the desert to Canaan with Yahweh at their head.† But this again is not in the text, and the same objections from the context which were urged against the former interpretation are valid against this.‡

Text and context constrain us, therefore, to interpret the verses of the coming of Yahweh to the help of his people in the war with Sisera.§ The ancient seats of Yahweh were not in Canaan, but in the South, at Sinai (J, Ex. 19<sup>11. 18. 20</sup>, P passim) or Horeb (E, Ex. 3<sup>1</sup> 18<sup>5</sup> 33<sup>6</sup> Nu. 10<sup>33</sup> &c., D passim); the latter is the tradition of the northern tribes (1 K. 19<sup>8</sup>), and is probably to be assumed here. Horeb was in the land of Midian, i.e. in Arabia, east of the eastern prong of the Red Sea, the gulf of 'Aqabah,|| among mountains which form the southern continuation of the range east of the 'Arabah. From Horeb, Yahweh would come into Canaan from Seir, from the plateau of Edom, as in our verse. The second verb is generally translated trembled (cf. Is. 64<sup>1</sup>), but streamed is a more natural rendering of the Hebrew word and gives a better parallel, especially if we adopt the reading of  $\mathfrak{G}$  in the previous member.—Before Yahweh (that is, Sinai), before Yahweh, the God of Israel] the words that is, Sinai are a gloss to the mountains in the preceding clause; \* originally, as its form shows, a marginal note, made by some one to whom the language of v.<sup>3f.</sup> suggested Ex. 19. It is not specifically the plateau in distinction from the mountains, but is simply the region of Edom.—גַּם שָׁמַיִם נִשְׁפָּרוּ the particle is not climacteric, but cumulative; each clause adds a trait to the completeness of the description. נָפַף is 'drop, drip,' in distinction from 'pour, flow,' in a continuous stream; usually with acc. as in the next clause.  $\mathfrak{G}$  PVLNO  $\xi \epsilon \tau \alpha \rho \acute{\alpha} \chi \theta \eta$   $\Lambda \xi \xi \epsilon \sigma \tau \acute{\alpha} \theta \eta$   $M \xi \xi \epsilon \sigma \tau \eta \dagger$  I turbatum est (Verecundus), i.e. נִשְׁפָּרוּ (Bu., *Richt. u. Commonly taken deictically, yon Sinai, Sinai there; others, Sinai, I say. The first would only be natural if Sinai were in sight, and for neither is there sufficient grammatical warrant. Examples superficially similar are collected in the grammars, e.g. Green, § 252, 2 a; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 126, 5 n. 2, § 136 n. 3, and esp. Driver in BDB. Lex., s. v. וַיֹּה; but they need to be carefully sifted. In some the pron. is pred.; in a good many others (esp. in the Pss.) we may recognize the influence of Aramaic syntax; Ex. 32<sup>1</sup> (וַיֹּה מִשֶּׁה) 1 K. 14<sup>14</sup> (see Klost.) Is. 23<sup>13</sup> (see Duhm) are glosses, in which וַיֹּה is used just as we use "i.e." The suspicion that in Jud. 5<sup>6</sup> also the words are a gloss receives some confirmation from the variations of the Greek versions; see my edition of the Hebrew text in The Sacred Books of the Old Testament, &c. Σ alone renders quite grammatically τούτέστι τὸ Σιναι; cf. also Ps. 68<sup>9</sup>.

6-8. The state of things before the war.—Travel on the highways was stopped, and travellers were constrained to take roundabout byways; the country was harried by armed bands of Canaanites, so that the Israelite peasants were compelled to abandon their villages. This is not a mere instance and illustration of the insecurity of the land under Canaanite misrule; it is the grievance which was the cause of war.—6. In the days of Shamgar ben Anath, in the days of Jael] the period immediately preceding the appearance of Deborah as leader and deliverer (v.<sup>7b</sup>). The asyndeton would imply that Shamgar and Jael were contemporaries. The latter can be no other than the heroine celebrated in v.<sup>24ff.</sup>; ‡ not an otherwise unknown judge of the same name, § in which case the author must have distinguished them in some way, e.g. by adding the name of his father. The difficulty, however, which this hypothesis is created to relieve is a real one. It is singular that the name of this Bedawi woman should be coupled with that of Shamgar. And how can the period before the rise of Deborah be called the days of Jael, when the deed which made her famous was only the last act in the deliverance which Deborah had already achieved? The best that can be said is, that, although Shamgar and Jael, both of whom in different ways wrought deliverance for their people, were living, they did nothing to free Israel from the tyranny of the Canaanites until Deborah appeared. But it must be confessed that this is not very natural; and it would perhaps be better to regard in the days of Jael as a gloss.* If this be so, the question will arise whether Shamgar was originally an Israelite hero at all. In the comm. on 3<sup>31</sup> it has been shown that as a deliverer of Israel he belongs to the latest redaction, and that the slaughter of the Philistines is premature. If 5<sup>6</sup> is interpreted independently of this unhistorical exploit, it would be quite as natural to see in him the oppressor of Israel as its champion.† The name is strangely foreign and heathenish.‡ The obvious objection to this interpretation is, that Shamgar plays no part in the struggle; the chief of the enemy is Sisera.§ — Caravans ceased, and those who travelled the roads went by roundabout paths] the first words are usually interpreted, as in Ps., the highways were disused; cf. Is. 33<sup>8</sup>. It is doubtful, however, whether the verb will bear this meaning, and the parallelism is impaired. Commerce between different parts of the land was cut off, and those who were compelled to journey by themselves took circuitous and unfrequented bypaths. — 7. The first half-verse evidently continues the description of the wrongs which Israel suffered in the days of Shamgar. The meaning of the words, however, is uncertain. The noun (p̄razōn) occurs again in v.<sup>11</sup>, but no rendering which suits one of these places seems to be possible in the other. In v.<sup>7</sup> we might perhaps give it the sense, village population, or better, by a slight emendation, read, hamlets ceased; the peasants deserted their villages for the protection of the walled towns. This is appropriate enough in the context, and may be right. || If so, the word

The rendering mighty men,* or counsel, leadership, rule, judges,† is recommended by the fact that it would be possible in v.<sup>11</sup> also; but has no support in usage or etymology, and in v.<sup>7</sup> is less appropriate to the context and parallelism.

The repetition of the verb ceased without a subject may be accidental, or a subject synonymous with p̄erazōn may have fallen out of the text. ‡ — Till thou didst arise, Deborah] the verbs may be either the first person or the second person feminine with the old ending; v.<sup>12</sup> (cf. v.<sup>15</sup>) makes it probable that the latter is intended. § Budde thinks v.<sup>7b</sup> a gloss; see note. — A matron in Israel] the phrase occurs in the Old Testament only in 2 S. 20<sup>10</sup>, a city and a mother in Israel (Ⓢ correctly, μητρόπολις), || from which Niebuhr infers that Deborah also was not a woman, but a town, Daberath-Debūriyeh. ¶

The English version, following וְ and Jewish commentators, || connects the verse with the following, and understands it to refer to Israel's sin in worshipping strange gods and its consequence, a hostile invasion: "They chose new gods; then was war in the gates." ¶ This translation of the last hemistich is impossible; that of the first, for grammatical reasons, very improbable. Moreover, if the poet had meant to speak of the apostasy of Israel as the cause of the evils that had befallen it, the natural place to do so was before v.<sup>6</sup>, where the description of those evils begins. But that he construed the history of his times as the author of the introduction to the Book of Judges does (2<sup>6ff.</sup>) is nowhere intimated in the Ode, and is in itself most improbable. 9-11. The text of these verses has suffered so badly that there is no reasonable hope that any art or skill by the critic will ever be able to restore it. The ancient versions found the text in substantially the same state in which it has been transmitted to us, and had no tradition to guide them in interpreting it. The disjointed words and phrases to which we can attach a probable sense do not afford a sufficient basis for conjecture; the connexion is impenetrably obscure. We are here, as more than once in the following verses, in very much the same case as the epigraphist who has before him a badly defaced or mutilated inscription, the difficulty of deciphering which, he has reason to suspect, is increased by partial and unskilful attempts at restoration. What can, with more or less confidence, be made out is this: § <sup>9</sup> My heart (goes out) to the rulers (?) of Israel—those who offer themselves freely among the people—bless ye Yahweh—<sup>10</sup> men that ride reddish asses—that sit on . . .—and that walk on the road . . .—<sup>11</sup> from (?) a sound of . . . between watering-places—there they rehearse the righteous acts of Yahweh—the righteous acts of . . . in Israel—then went down to the gates the people of Yahweh. ||

Verse<sup>9</sup> seems to repeat the motive of v.<sup>2</sup>, but unfortunately the one is as obscure as the other; v.<sup>10</sup> is generally explained as calling

‡ It is obviously impossible, as it would be unprofitable, in the obscure and corrupt places of this poem, to discuss or even record all the guesses of commentators. I shall pass over in silence such as seem to me to have no claim to serious consideration. The curious reader may consult Bachmann.

upon the persons there described, perhaps representing different classes of society or men of different pursuits, to join in singing Yahweh's praises for the security which they now enjoy, in contrast to v.<sup>6.7a</sup>. The archers (??) among the watering-places are also supposed to have something to do with celebrating Yahweh's righteous acts. The first part of the poem would thus end, as it began, with a summons to laud and magnify Yahweh's great name. Verse<sup>11b</sup> is, upon this supposition, entirely unsuitable after v.<sup>11a</sup> and before v.<sup>12</sup>; it has been conjectured that it is accidentally misplaced from v.<sup>13a</sup>.* This interpretation of v.<sup>9-11</sup> makes the verses interrupt and delay the swift movement of the poem in a way that is quite unlike the author.† After the appearance of Deborah (v.<sup>7b</sup>), we expect to hear of the preparations for the war, and this is confirmed by v.<sup>11b</sup>, — then marched down to the gates the people of Yahweh; cf. also v.<sup>8b</sup>. With v.<sup>12</sup> the war itself begins.

8. יבחר אלהים חרשים against the interpretations which make God subject, it is decisive that throughout the poem the name יהוה is used; new things (חרשות Is. 48<sup>6</sup>) or new men is in this collocation fatally ambiguous. The same objection holds against It (Israel) chooses (or, when it chooses) ‡ new gods; an author who meant to be understood would hardly write thus. Moreover, the idea is foreign to the poem, and is introduced in an inappropriate place. Perhaps a scribe may have tried to restore the partly illegible words of his copy by the help of Dt. 32<sup>17</sup>; cf. Jud. 10<sup>14</sup>. New judges ascribes to אלהים a fictitious sense and adds a new element of ambiguity. — אֵלֶּהם § it is difficult to imagine what is intended by this anomalous pronunciation; see Ges. Thes., and Ba. After אֵל we expect a finite verb, as in v.<sup>11. 13. 19</sup> (אֵל נִלְחָמוּ וְ) <sup>22</sup>, and שָׁעֲרִים is apparently accus.; but אֵלֶּהם (Ps. 35<sup>1</sup> 56<sup>2. 31</sup>) would be very suspicious here, and then he assaulted the gates would hardly admit any interpretation but that of Jerome. ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἑκείνου ἔρχεται, i.e. אֵלֶּהם שָׁעֲרִים <sup>13</sup> (cf. Thdt., Ephr., Aug.), which is certainly the most natural pronunciation of the consonants. For a conjecture based on this, see Bu., Richt. u. Sam., p. 103; cf. also Kautzsch, *Textkrit. [לבי לרוקקי ישראל] S, Schm., Ew., al. supply אמר says; better, simply, belongs to, goes out to, in gratitude and affection (L diligit, Ra., Ki., Cler., most moderns). הוֹקֵק (Is. 10<sup>1</sup>) seems to be the same as קִחֵק v.<sup>14</sup> (see there) Dt. 33<sup>21</sup>; the form is best explained as ptc. Qal. — [המהנרבים בעם וי] closely resembles v.<sup>2</sup>, and is equally obscure; the ptc. is hardly appositive to הוֹקֵקִים (Stud.), but its counterpart in loose construction (Schm., Schnur.). — 10. I see no way to do anything with שִׁירוֹ, on which, unfortunately, the understanding of the whole verse depends. It is commonly translated, tell forth, proclaim, laud (GL, most comm.; cf. Ps. 105<sup>2</sup> 145<sup>5</sup>); others render consider, meditate, muse (Cler., Schm., Schnur., Herd., Ba., al.), which the usage would rather admit, but which is even less suitable in the context. — [אתנות צהרות] on the colour (gray, or tawny, inclining to red) see A. Müller, p. 4-6. On riding asses, see on 10<sup>4</sup>. — [ישבי על מדין] the noun is unknown. The older interpreters, by an impossible etymology, explain it, judgement, or place of judgement; most moderns derive it from מִדְּ (plur. 3<sup>16</sup>),* with Aramaic plural ending. As the sense garments is obviously unsuitable, it is assumed that the word had the wider sense, cloths; hence either, saddle-cloths, housings, or (rich) carpets (so the most). The phrases are supposed by many to designate different social classes, with great diversity of opinion as to what classes or how many; others, laying the emphasis on the verbs, imagine the call to be addressed to every Israelite, whatever he may be about; cf. Dt. 6<sup>7</sup> Ps. 139<sup>3</sup> Is. 37<sup>28</sup> Ps. 1<sup>1</sup> &c. (so Stud., Reuss, al.). — 11. [מִקֹּל מַחֲצִים בֵּין מַחֲצִים] is formally possible as denom. Piel from חָץ 'arrow,' 'men that shoot arrows' (Ki., RLbG., Kuypers, Lette, Ges., al. mu.); others, 'cast lots with arrows' (Schultens), for the division of the booty (Schnur., al.); while others still derive it directly from חָצַץ, to which they give the meaning 'divide' sc. the spoil (חֵלֶק; Hollm., Stud., Ba.). † But the difficulty lies not more in this word than in the preposition מִן and the noun שְׂאֵבִים (lit. 'places where water is drawn'). There is no clue to the meaning of the line. — [שָׁם יִתְּנוּ] the obscurity of the preceding prevents our seeing to what place שָׁם refers, or what is the subject of the verb. הִנֵּה 11<sup>40</sup> is frequently compared with Arab. ثَنَى iv., 'eulogize' (or 'defame'). But as equivalent of Heb. שָׁנָה the word is not conceivable in old Hebrew. — [צִדְקָה יִירוֹה] seemingly manifestations of his justice in defending and delivering his people; cf. 1 S. 12<sup>7</sup> Mi. 6<sup>3</sup> &c. — [צִדְקָה פְּרוּנוֹ בִּישְׂרָאֵל] see on v.<sup>7</sup>. (Hollm., al.). The gates (metonymy for cities; cf. 6) are thought by some to be those of the Israelites, to which they now return in peace and security, cf. v.<sup>8</sup> (so, with various modifications, Stud., Ke., Ba., al.); others, with greater probability, interpret of the gates of the enemy's cities, against which Israel now marched (L, Ew., Be., Reuss, al.).

12-22. Israel marches into battle; defeat and flight of the Canaanites.—The second part of the Ode. After an opening apostrophe to Deborah and Barak, we see the tribes march down to the fray and hear the reproachful questions which the absence of others evokes. Then we are in the midst of the combat; the heavens themselves fight against Sisera, the torrents of Kishon sweep his proud host to ruin. The text of v.<sup>13-15</sup> is so corrupt that we can hardly read more than the names of the tribes; but their general purport is manifest. From v.<sup>16</sup> the text is better preserved.—12. Rouse thee, rouse thee, Deborah; rouse thee, rouse thee, strike up the song] interpreters who assume that in these words Deborah calls upon herself to sing the Ode of Victory find it hard to explain why this invocation stands thus in the middle of the Ode, instead of beginning it.* The explanation of Studer and others, that this is the real beginning of the Ode, to which v.<sup>2-11</sup> is merely a proemium, hardly relieves the difficulty; we should have to go a step farther, and with Ewald, regard v.<sup>2-11</sup> as a distinct poem. The complete parallel between the call to Deborah in v.<sup>12a</sup> and that to Barak in v.<sup>12b</sup> makes it improbable, however, that in the former Deborah addresses herself; and we have seen other reasons for believing that the heroine is not the author of the Ode. In view of the following context, verse <sup>12b</sup> is best understood as a summons to Barak, not to participate in the celebration of the triumph, but to attack the enemy; and, accordingly, v.<sup>12a</sup>, which cannot be separated from v.<sup>12b</sup> and referred to an earlier time,† is to be explained, not as a call to Deborah to sing a song of victory, but to strike up the song of battle.‡ The verse is then in a suitable place. The poet sees the people of Yahweh marching to attack the foe (v.<sup>11b</sup>) and breaks in with an apostrophe to the two leaders; to Deborah, to fire the hearts of her countrymen by song; to Barak, to make prisoners the proud foemen.* The obscurity of the preceding verses, however, makes it impossible to say with confidence that this is the transition intended by the poet.—Up, Barak; lead captive thy captive train, son of Abinoam] a bold prolepsis; but not an unnatural one for a poet after the event. With an equally admissible pronunciation of the Hebrew word we might translate, lead captive thy captors, and surmise that Barak, like Gideon (8<sup>18-21</sup>), had his own wrongs to avenge as well as those of his people, a touch of personal interest which we should welcome.†

13-15<sup>a</sup>. The tribes are in motion against the enemy.—The verses are so mutilated that we can make out little more than the bare names of the tribes.—13. The second member may be read, The people of Yahweh marched down for him ‡ as heroes (cf. v.<sup>23</sup>); something of the same kind seems to have stood in the preceding line, of which there remains, then marched down . . . nobles. In view of the parallel it might be conjectured that the name Israel was originally found in this line.—14. In the first two lines nothing is certain but the names, Ephraim and Benjamin. “From Ephraim their root (is) in Amalek—after thee Benjamin among thy peoples” §—is nonsense which must give the most courageous translator pause.—From Machir marched down truncheon-bearers, and from Zebulun those who carry the muster-master’s staff] Machir is here Manasseh, of which tribe it was the principal branch. || In later times the seats of Machir were in Gilead; but there is good ground for the opinion that the conquest of this region was made, not in the first invasion of the lands east of the Jordan by Israel, but subsequently, by a reflux

The muster-master (lit. writer) in the later military organization (2 K. 25<sup>19</sup>) was an officer who had charge of the enumeration and enrolment of the troops; a kind of adjutant general.† In our text it is probably the chieftains themselves who muster the quotas of their own clans; the poet evidently seeks changing expressions for the often recurring idea, chiefs. — 15<sup>a</sup>. Issachar, which is not named at all in ch. 1, ‡ is here mentioned with special honour as the tribe of Deborah, and apparently of Barak also. Unfortunately the text is here again in such disorder that the latter point at least is extremely doubtful. The first line may perhaps be made to read, And the princes of Issachar were with Deborah, or, were the people of Deborah; the rest defies translation. The second line connects Barak also in some way with Issachar; but, in accordance with the uniform structure of the preceding verses, we should rather expect the name of another tribe; and, on the other hand, the omission of Naphtali from this list is strange, especially in view of v. 18. In the third line the words, into the plain . . . at his feet, suffice to show that the verse, like those before it, describes the tribes pouring down from their hills into the plain to give battle to the Canaanites. The original seats of Issachar seem to have been south of Naphtali and southeast of Zebulun, probably in the hills between the two valleys which descend from the eastern end of the Great Plain to the Jordan (Wady el-Bireh, Nahr Gālūd); it may comparatively early have occupied a part of the range of Gilboa, south of the latter valley. Toward the northwest it reached to the foot of Tabor, where it met both Zebulun and Naphtali.§ The territory occupied by Issachar was one in which it was peculiarly difficult to maintain its independence, and in Gen. 49<sup>14f</sup> the tribe is taunted for the ignoble spirit in which it preferred peace to freedom. ||

Pi. from יָרַד (Ra., Ki.; cf. Stud.; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 69, 1 c). — שְׁרִיד לְאִוִּירִים is the survivor of a battle or calamity, often parallel to פְּלִיט; collectively Is. 1<sup>9</sup>. There is nothing in the usage of the word to warrant the rendering a little band (Köhl., Stud., Cass., Reuss, and most) †; nor can שְׁרִיד, in view of the parallel בְּנִבּוּרִים (cf. v. 23), ‡ refer to the enemy (T, Rabb., JDMich., Schnur., Herd., Stud., al.). — מִן (cf. מִן) joins עַם to the first member of the verse, § to carry out its misinterpretation of יָרַד; it is rightly connected with the following (עַם יְהוָה) by B<sup>G</sup>N<sup>S</sup>, λαὸς Κυρίου κατέβη αὐτὸς ἐν τοῖς κραταιοῖς, || in which αὐτὸς (לו) is also to be preferred to מִן לִי ¶. In the light of the parallelism, it may be conjectured that the unintelligible לְ שְׁרִיד in v. 2 is a corruption of יִשְׂרָאֵל. — In בְּנִבּוּרִים the ב is perhaps in the character of, as (Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 119, 3 b. 1), rather than among; certainly not against. — 14. מִן מִן twice in this verse (cf. מִן בּוֹלֵן) Is. 46<sup>8</sup> Mi. 7<sup>12</sup> Pss. But, apart from the enigmatical form of the expression, the author cannot mean that only those clans of Ephraim which were settled in that district came to the war (Ew., Be.); and that that region was the centre and stronghold of the tribe is neither in accord with the evidence of history nor relevant in this context. The words stand in the place where we should have the predicate of the sentence; it is equally awkward to have to borrow a verb from יָרַד v. 13 (Schnur., Stud.) or from יָרַד v. 14<sup>c</sup> (Ba.). שְׁרֵשׁ is probably the corruption of a verb, and for בְּעַמְלֶק we may conjecture that the original reading was בעַמְלֶק, which is given by APLMO Θ I § 2; cf. v. 15 בְּעַמְלֶק שָׁלַח וג' (see there). — אַחֲרָיִךְ בְּנִימִין בְּעַמְמֶיךָ

With סִפֵּר in this use cf. שִׁפֵּר (from a root of similar meaning; often coupled with שַׁבֵּט), cf. 2 Chr. 26<sup>11</sup>. In 2 K. 25<sup>19</sup> שִׁפֵּר שֶׁר הַצִּבָּא, הַסִּפֵּר שֶׁר הַצִּבָּא הַמִּצְבִּיא אֶת עַם הָאָרֶץ may reasonably be suspected of being a gloss; in Jer. 52<sup>25</sup> the words have been rendered grammatically correct by dropping the article before סִפֵּר. Klost. takes סִפֵּר (or סִפֵּן) as n. pr. Bu. conjecturally joins סִפֵּר in Jud. 5<sup>14</sup> to the following verse: וַיִּשְׁרִי סִפֵּר שֶׁרִים וְגו' — 15a. וַיִּשְׁרִי [ביששכר עַם רְבוּרָה] my princes is obviously impossible; the correction וַיִּשְׁרִי (constr. before preposition), princes in Issachar (Schnur., Stud., Be., al.),* though grammatically admissible, is otherwise not much better; the princes of Issachar gives a satisfactory sense, but we cannot be confident that this restores the original text. For עַם we might also read עַם (Bu.). — וַיִּשְׁשֶׁכֶר [כֵּן בִּרְק Stud. conjectures; that instead of this second Issachar, which neither 𐤀 nor 𐤋 seem to have read, the original reading was Naphtali; cf. 4<sup>6</sup> 5<sup>18</sup>. The insertion of כ before the first member of the comparison removes the grammatical harshness; but it is difficult to imagine a worse anticlimax than, and as was Issachar so was Barak. — בַּעֲמֶק שִׁלֹּחַ בְּרַגְלֵי the passive is certainly wrong (Müller); the unintelligibility of the preceding clause forbids us to say more than this. 15<sup>b</sup>–18. The encomium of the tribes which under their gallant chieftains marched down to the fray (v.<sup>13–15a</sup>) is followed by reproaches of those who were missing from the ranks of Israel; their conduct is contrasted with the shining example of Zebulun and Naphtali (v.<sup>18</sup>). In the next clause the translation of Jerome, after some of the Greek versions, is generally adopted, ut audias sibilos gregum ; which recent scholars rightly interpret, not of the bleating of the flocks, || but of the piping of shepherds among their flocks ; ¶ better, perhaps, of the calls of the shepherds to their flocks. The rest of the verse is repeated by mistake from the end of v.<sup>15</sup>.** The seats of Reuben were east of the Dead Sea in northern Moab (Num. 32<sup>37f.</sup>), where its relation to the native population was probably not unlike that of Asher and Naphtali among the Canaanites in Galilee (1<sup>31f. 33</sup>). Like Simeon, it seems never to have settled down to agriculture. In ancient times, according to the patriarchal legend, one of the leading tribes of Israel, the first of the Leah group, early in the historical period dwindled into insignificance. It was occupied by the tribe of Gad, which is doubtless meant in our verse.‡ The disposition of Reuben and Gad to pursue their own interests and let their brethren on the other side of the Jordan fight their own battles is reflected in Nu. 32<sup>1ff.</sup>

The more distant northern tribes also stood apart and were not represented in the ranks of Israelite warriors. — And Dan, why does he live neighbour to the ships?] the words are difficult; but there seems no sufficient reason for suspecting the text, § which is supported by the parallel line about Asher. This parallel also shows that the northern settlements of Dan (18<sup>27ff.</sup>) are meant, || not the earlier seats of the tribe in the southwest (1<sup>34f.</sup>; see there).¶ In neither place did Dan actually come down to the seaboard.** The words would be quite inexplicable if we had to translate, why did he remain in the ships (RV.). The rendering adopted above, which gives the meaning of the verb more exactly, removes the difficulty, if we may interpret, Why does he live as a dependent, under the protection of the Phoenician sea-farers? †† This was probably the situation of the Danites, as it had been of the inhabitants of Laish before them (18<sup>7.28</sup>). The only objection to this explanation is, that ships is a somewhat remote metonymy for a seagoing people; compare, however, 'ship coast' for sea coast, Gen. 49<sup>13</sup>. — Asher abode toward the coast of the Great Sea] cf. Gen. 49<sup>13</sup>, of Zebulun. — And remains by its landings]

the last word is found only here ; ¶ in portubus morabatur. The parallel line, the meaning of the root, and the use of derivatives of the corresponding root in Arabic make the general sense sufficiently certain. Asher occupied the mountainous inland, behind the Phoenician coast, and it is not impossible that Asherites may have settled in the Phoenician towns, as they did among the Canaanites in the interior. There is no reason to imagine that they had established themselves on the seaboard in any other way ; and in view of what is said of Dan it is hardly necessary to press the language even as far as this. See further on i<sup>81f.</sup>—18. In strong contrast to the unpatriotic or cowardly conduct of the eastern and northern tribes stands the conspicuous gallantry of Zebulun and Naphtali.* — Zebulun is a band that recklessly exposed itself to death] lit. that contemned its life to death.† — And Naphtali, upon the heights of the open field] Naphtali displayed equal valour. The last words cannot refer to the home of Naphtali among the hills of Galilee, ‡ but to the field on which the two tribes won this renown.§ The expression seems, however, inappropriate to the scene of the battle against Sisera, in the plain on the banks of the Kishon (v.<sup>19.21</sup>). Many commentators think that Mt. Tabor (4<sup>6.12.14</sup>) is meant ; || but Tabor is not mentioned in the Ode, which locates the field of battle, not at the foot of the mountain (4<sup>14</sup>), but on the other side of the plain near Taanach. The word used for heights does not necessarily denote a great elevation, but is rather a relative term (cf. Prov. 8<sup>2</sup> 9<sup>3.14</sup>) ; and may perhaps be employed here of the mounds and hillocks in the plain, which, however inconsiderable, were positions of advantage in the battle, especially as rallying points for the hard-pressed Canaanites before the rout became complete. desperation, Zebulun and Naphtali with reckless hardihood stormed and carried. So, at least, we can imagine it; a certain interpretation is hardly to be given. There is something tempting in ל's in regione Merome; the words would then refer to former exhibitions of impetuous bravery by these tribes, perhaps against Jabin; but the text of ל is supported by ס, and ל probably does not represent a different reading, but an ungrammatical translation.

15b. בפלגות ראוּבֵן in Job 20<sup>17</sup> פלגות is explained in the parallel line חָלִי פְלִי מֵיִם, usually in the phrase פְּלִי מֵיִם, primarily canals and ditches distributing water for irrigation; cf. is quite unintelligible; conculca anima mea robustos,* or, conculcabit fortiter, is simple bathos, and, aside from that, most inappropriate as the conclusion of v.<sup>20.21</sup>, which tell how heaven and earth conspired to destroy Sisera. Probably what originally stood here formed the end (predicate) of the second stichos of v.<sup>21</sup>, the repetition of the words stream of Kishon being a gloss to the subject.† The line would in that case correspond in sense to the preceding. — 22. Schnur., Köhl., Hollm., al.); it is now generally rendered as a jussive (Stud.), but the second pers. of the jussive is rare, except after אל, and no reason is apparent why the imperative should not have been used here as usual. — ען ] is construed by many, especially older scholars, as direct object (robur metonymy for robustus); by others as accus. of manner (Herd., Ew., Hitz., Be., Cass., Reuss, al.). In accordance with the suggestion made above (p. 160), we might conjecture something like נהל קרומים דרך נפשי ען (trample under foot, cf. Is. 63<sup>3</sup>); but we can have no confidence in any such restoration. — 22. [או הלכו ה'] the vb. v.<sup>20b</sup> Is. 16<sup>8</sup> Ps. 74<sup>6</sup> &c., 'give a heavy blow, pound.' The construction generally adopted by modern interpreters labours under two difficulties; the suppression of the object (the earth), and the preposition מן in the next line. The old versions all took the verb as passive, or at least neuter, as do also Ki., RLbG., Abulw., Tanch., Schm., Cler.; and it must be admitted that the construction is much simplified by the rendering, then the heels of the horses were battered by the gallop galloping of his steeds. It would then be preferable to pronounce הלכו (Pual). — [מהרהר והרות אביריו] the repetition probably imitative of the sound of galloping hoofs, as well as intensive in sense; cf. the exx. in Ew. § 313 a. Observe the suspended stat. constr. in the first word. The root only נהר 3<sup>2</sup> נהר; not in MH. Etymological connexion with דור (JDMich., Supplem.; Ges. Thes., al.) is very improbable; more likely the word is onomatopoeic. — [אביריו] his steeds; Jer. 8<sup>16</sup> 47<sup>8</sup> 50<sup>11</sup>. The suff. refers loosely to the enemy. Others translate, under the wild driving of their mighty men (Hollm., Stud., Be., Ba., Reuss, al.); but this gives a less perfect parallelism and assumes that דור could be used not only of the horse, as in Nah., but of the charioteer. The only reason for this somewhat forced interpretation vanishes if we make הלכו passive.

23-31. Death of Sisera. — The third division of the Ode consists of two parts; the flight and death of Sisera (v.<sup>23-27</sup>), and the scene in his palace, where his mother and her women await his return (v.<sup>28-30</sup>). — 23. The curse is obviously a foil to the following blessing (v.<sup>24</sup>); the conduct of the people of Meroz is contrasted with that of Jael. From this fact, as well as from the position of the verse, we may probably infer that the enemy in his flight passed this Israelite village, whose inhabitants, instead of cutting him off, like cowards allowed him to escape.* — Curse Meroz] the place is unknown, and we have no clue to its situation. Assuming that it must have been a town of considerable note, some scholars have surmised that the name Meroz is miswritten, by accident or design, for Merom (Jos. 11<sup>6</sup>),† or Meron (Jos. 12<sup>20</sup>)

cf. 11<sup>1</sup> (S),* or Meroth (Fl. Jos., 6j. ii. 20, 6) ; † but the premise is insecure, and the places suggested are all too far from the field of battle. It is more probable that Meroz was a mere hamlet which lay in the line of Sisera's flight. The various identifications that have been proposed by modern travellers may safely be dismissed. ‡ — The Messenger of Yahweh] not the human messenger who bears the word of Yahweh, his prophet, § but God himself as he reveals himself to men, cf. on 2<sup>1</sup> 6<sup>11</sup> ; we should think here more naturally of the Yahweh who goes before his people into battle (4<sup>14</sup> cf. 5<sup>4f.</sup>), and with the use of Messenger compare Ex. 23<sup>20, 23</sup> and Jos. 5<sup>13-15</sup>. || But it must be conceded that the phrase has here some difficulty. — Because they came not to the help of Yahweh] the position of the verse, in the midst of the description of the Canaanites' wild flight, shows that the words refer, not like v. 15<sup>b-17</sup> to their failure to join the rising of the tribes, but to their failure to help destroy the vanquished foe ; cf. 7<sup>24</sup> 8<sup>5-9, 15-17</sup>. — To the help of Yahweh as brave men] cf. v. 13<sup>b</sup> Ps. 55<sup>19</sup> &c. As he was hastily draining the bowl, Jael seized some heavy object that lay close at hand and felled him to the earth with a blow. — She reaches her hand to the pin] the word ordinarily means a pin or peg, frequently, as in 4<sup>21</sup>, a tent pin; or an implement shaped like a peg (Dt. 23<sup>13</sup> Jud. 16<sup>14</sup>). — The words in the next line which name or describe the weapon are very obscure. They are generally translated, workmen's hammer,† comparing 4<sup>21</sup>; but it is extremely doubtful whether the Hebrew will bear this sense, and the expression is certainly a strange one. The following verbs make it clear that it was a heavy, blunt implement which crushed Sisera's skull; a mallet or hammer would be entirely suitable in the context, but no light is thrown on the difficult words. It is a question of more importance, whether in the two lines two different weapons are meant, a pin and a mallet (?), as in 4<sup>21</sup>; or whether, as in the poetical parallelism is intrinsically not less probable, one weapon under two names or descriptive epithets. In answering this question we cannot be governed by the prose story (4<sup>21</sup>), which is later than the Ode, and may have followed a different tradition or even have originated in a misunderstanding of 5<sup>26a</sup>.‡ The verbs in v. 26<sup>b</sup> speak of pounding, smashing, rather than piercing; and v. 27 seems to be decisive. It describes the collapse of a man who, standing, receives a mortal blow on the head; not the writhing death agony of one who is pinned to the ground; see comm. there. Wellhausen thinks that the pin is the handle of the mallet; A. Müller and others doubt this. The uncertainty as to the precise nature of the implement renders it doubtful what is meant by the pin; but the main point is not affected by this doubt. Jael used one weapon, not two. § — And strikes Sisera a blow, destroys his head] puts it out of existence. The second verb not elsewhere in O.T. — Smashes and demolishes his temple] lit. makes it vanish. The two lines are symmetrical; the first verb in each describes the act, the second the result. In view of this symmetry we might be tempted to conjecture that the name Sisera is a later addition; she smote, destroyed his head, &c. — 27. At her very feet he sank down, fell, lay still] observe the effect of the asyndeton in the swift succession of verbs. The interpreters who, in harmony with 4<sup>21</sup>, assume that Sisera was lying asleep, are compelled to do great violence to these words. Bachmann candidly says that in accordance with the usage of the three verbs elsewhere, singly or in conjunction, they would be understood as they are translated above, he went down on his knees, fell prostrate, and lay there dead; * but he feels constrained, in defiance of usage, to render instead, he writhed, fell (i.e. died), lay there dead.† Others, to explain his fall, imagine that Sisera was lying on a raised bed! ‡ — The words, at her very feet he sank down, fell, are accidentally repeated. § — On the spot where he sank down, there he fell, killed] lit. a victim of violence.

Many have inferred that the indignant Israelites destroyed the town (Be., Cass., Reuss; cf. connected, as eg. in the case of Saul; and as a bowl for giants would be of corresponding proportions, we should probably be not far from the mind of the author if we rendered, in a huge bowl; cf. ארזי אל, זררי אל, &c. The genitive is, however, not a mere circumscription of the adjective. — [חפאה] parallel to הלב Dt. 32<sup>14</sup> Is. 7<sup>22</sup>. It is not butter (versions and many), nor cream (Stud., Ba., Be., Cass., al. mu.), neither of which is in accordance with the usage of the word or the habits of Bedawin, but soured milk, the meat and drink of the nomads (Schnur.). See Burckhardt, Bedouins and Wahabys, i. p. 239 f.; Doughty, Arabia Deserta, i. p. 263, 325, 382. — 26. ירה ליהר. ירה is parallel to סינה, as in Is. 48<sup>18</sup> Ps. 21<sup>9</sup> 26<sup>10</sup> &c. (Ba., We.); not in distinction from it, her left hand (של, J. Kimchi, RLbG., Cler., Kōhl., Hollm., Be., Ke., Oettli, al. mu.). הַשְׁלֵחָה is pointed as 3 pl. fem.* How the punctuators construed this it is difficult to imagine; fortunately it is also unnecessary. Most recent grammarians pronounce as 3 s. f. with suff. חֲשִׁלָּהּ (De Dieu, Cler., Schnur., Be., Ol., Sta., Ges.<sup>25</sup>, Kō., Bi., al.), taking ירה as a casus pendens; her hand — to the pin she reaches it. The versions show no trace of this ending or suff. — [הַלְהִימָה עֲמִלִּים] the ancient translators found these words perplexing: ὁ ἀποστομὸς κατακόπῳ, apparently meaning, “for the decapitation of exhausted men”; cf. תְּרִישִׁין וְאִמְנִין למִיחָבֵר רִשִׁיעִין וְאִמְנִין. ὁ ἀποστομὸς κατακόπῳ (ἡ) ἀχρεῖῳσαι. The commonly received translation is that of Aquila, ἐς σφύρα καπιώντων (ἡ) ad fabrorum malleos, ἡ αὖ to the carpenter’s hammer; that the weapon must be a hammer or mallet seemed certain from 4<sup>21</sup> (הַמִּכְבֶּת). But although a derivative of הַלֵּם might, for all we know, be the name of a mallet, the form הַלְהִימָה does not tolerate such an explanation. The affirmative וְ is, to say the least, very rare in Old Hebrew, and is specifically the ending of secondary abstract nouns, † much like tas in Latin, and never makes nomina instrumenti. Probably the punctuation intends a secondary development of the infinitive after the Aramaic fashion, as תְּרִישִׁין וְאִמְנִין understand it; † but this is quite impossible. We do not gain much by pronouncing הַלְהִימָה (ἡ), for, assuming that הַלְהִימָה might mean ‘mallet,’ how many hammers are we to suppose that Jael used on her guest’s head? Finally, עֲמִלִּים does not mean artisans (smiths, carpenters), but men who are worn out, or wear themselves out, with toil and hardships; ‘hammer of hard-working (or weary) men’ § is a singular metonymy for a heavy hammer! — [מַחֲקָה רָשָׁא] the verb, only here in O.T., is freq. in MH. in the sense, ‘scrape off, efface, erase’; in Arab. maḥaqa is ‘destroy utterly,’ so that no trace of the thing remains, ‘annihilate.’ Most interpreters, assuming that the word must be synonymous with the preceding הַלְהִימָה, translate, smote, shattered, or the like, frequently supporting the rendering by hazardous etymologies; but the context does not require us to depart from the sense which MH. and Arab. suggest and which the parallel clause confirms. — מחצה [וחלפה רִקְחוּ] it seems preferable, with many codd., to omit the conjunction before the first verb. מחץ 'smash, shatter' by a heavy blow, as with a club or mace, Ps. 110<sup>6</sup> 68<sup>22</sup> (the head) Dt. 33<sup>11</sup> (loins) Ps. 18<sup>9</sup>. The second verb, חלפה, is usually translated pierced, transfix, sc. with the pin (Versions, Ra., Ki., Cler., Schm., Hollm., Ew., and almost all recent scholars). Job 20<sup>24</sup> is alleged in support of this rendering; but the cases are not at all parallel. The image of the swift arrow pursuing and overtaking the fleeing man is easily connected with the ordinary usage of חלף; that the shaft pierced his vitals is implied by the following rather than said in החלפתי. In Jud. 5<sup>26</sup> there is no such connexion; it is impossible to associate making a hole in a man's head with any sense in which we know the verb חלף in O.T. or the cognate languages. Here again the meaning transfix has been invented to suit the situation described in 4<sup>21</sup>. If 5<sup>26</sup> had been interpreted for itself, no one would ever have thought of such a rendering. I take חלפה to correspond to מחקה in the foregoing line, 'cause to pass away, vanish'; cf. the intrans. use Is. 2<sup>18</sup>; trans. Is. 24<sup>5</sup> (|| עבר, ||). — 27. [בין רגליה. — (הפר, עבר, ||).] the preposition need not be taken literally; * it is more emphatic than אל or על. Schnur. and others compare the Arab. idiom, بين يديه, in his presence, &c.; but it may be doubted whether the expressions are really parallel. — כרע ופל שכב the first two verbs together Ps. 20<sup>9</sup> cf. Is. 10<sup>4</sup>; כרע and שכב Nu. 24<sup>9</sup>. כרע is prop. 'bend the knees,' kneel, or crouch, squat on the heels; cf. Jud. 7<sup>5.6</sup> 1 S. 4<sup>19</sup> 2 K. 1<sup>13</sup> &c.; said of a mortally wounded man whose knees fail under him 2 K. 9<sup>24</sup>. That it could be used of the spasmodic drawing up the legs, as of a man who while lying received a death wound,† is not inconceivable; it is the sequence כרע ופל which makes this impossible. ופל is indeed not infrequently used (esp. in the ptc.) of one who is prostrate on the ground (3<sup>25</sup> 19<sup>27</sup> 1 S. 31<sup>8</sup> &c.), but only of one who has fallen (A. Müller). — [שרר] a victim of violence. The vb. of persons Jer. 5<sup>6</sup> Ps. 17<sup>9</sup>, cf. Pual (of nations) Jer. 4<sup>13</sup> &c.

28–30. In Sisera's palace. — With the vision of the king lying dead at the feet of his slayer still before our eyes, the poet transports us to Sisera's palace, where the queen-mother is anxiously watching for her son's return. The presentiment of evil which she herself stifles; the sanguine confidence of the ladies of her court, who see in imagination the division of the booty, an Israelite maiden or two for each man, and abundance of the richly dyed and embroidered stuffs which they themselves prize so highly — all this is depicted with inimitable skill. Their light-hearted anticipations form a striking contrast to the ill-suppressed forebodings of the mother's heart, and the whole scene produces on the reader, who knows the ghastly reality, an incomparable effect. Lowth* justly says that there is nothing in literature more perfect in its kind than these verses. It is only modern sentimentality that can discover in this passage the note of a woman's pity for the mother of the fallen king. It is the pitilessness of triumph; we need not say, the exultation of gratified revenge.† — 28. Through the window she peered] the effect of the transition is heightened by this postponement of the explicit subject to the second clause; the reader must himself feel who this anxious woman is (cf. v.<sup>25</sup>). The verb rendered peer is used of one who, leaning forward, looks down on something below him; cf. 2 S. 6<sup>16</sup> Nu. 23<sup>28</sup> &c. The meaning of the next verb (EV. cried) ‡ is doubtful; the root is not found elsewhere in the O.T. In Aramaic it means, sound the trumpet, raise a clamour, in war or jubilee; in one instance in MH. it seems to be used of the clamorous cry of the mourning women; § but neither of these senses is appropriate here, || and for the sake of the parallelism, especially in these interlocked lines, we desiderate a synonym of the preceding peer, as G<sup>Aal</sup>. T render; see crit. note. — Through the lattice-window] the translation is conventional; we know the word, which occurs here and in Prov. 7<sup>6</sup>, only as a synonym for window. — Why does his chariot corps fail to come? Why tarry the hoof-beats of his chariots?] the first sign of the return of the warriors would be the distant sound of horses feet; cf. v.<sup>22</sup>. — 29. The sagest of her princesses answer] there is a fine irony in the allusion to the wisdom of these ladies, whose prognostications were so wide of the truth. Cf. Is. 9<sup>3</sup>. — A wench or a couple of them for each man] a coarse word seems to be intentionally employed. Women captives were the slaves of the captors; cf. Dt. 21<sup>10-14</sup>. In the remainder of the verse some awkward repetitions mar both the rhythm and the sense. It is clear only that richly dyed and embroidered stuffs are meant, in the distribution of which the women of Sisera's harem had a keen interest.‡ Reuss, by omitting the intrusive words, restores the verses: § Booty of dyed stuffs for Sisera; A piece of embroidered work or two for the neck of the booty.|| The last words cannot be right; it is absurd to imagine that the victors used these rich stuffs to deck out for the triumphal procession the beasts they had taken;¶ and if the meaning were that they adorned with them the shoulders of their fair captives,** these would hardly be called simply the booty, nor would this word be used in one line for the dyed stuffs themselves, and in the next for the prisoners who are arrayed in them.†† The parallelism would lead us to expect here a designation of the person or persons for whom these costly prizes were destined, corresponding to the words, for Sisera, in the first half of the verse. Ewald very ingeniously conjectured, for the neck of the queen,‡‡ changing but one letter of the text. Reuss, supposing the queen mother to be speaking, emends, for my shoulders. More probably they were guided only by the context. Menahem and Ra. seek an etymological connexion with בִּבְבָּ 'pupil of the eye.' The tense of וְהִיבֵב conforms to the regular sequence of tenses in prose; but has no parallel in the Ode (cf. Ex. 15), and makes a most prosaic impression. || [אֲשַׁנֵּב — we know the word only as a synonym of חֹלֶן. The rendering lattice comes from GALMO al. Θ I § δὴ τῆς δακτυλῆς. The etymology which has done duty since Lette (Roed. in *Ges. But this discord of number is intolerable; we should pronounce תַּעֲנֶנָּה 3 pl. f., and suppose that the object pronoun was omitted, being easily supplied from לוֹ in the next line. An alternative would be to pronounce the noun חֲכָמוֹת, † the wisdom of her princesses answers her. The abstract noun may be followed by the singular verb as in Prov. 9<sup>1</sup>, and we should be able to retain the suff. in תַּעֲנֶנָּה. On the whole, however, the former construction is probably the safer one here. — אָפַּי הִיא חֹשֶׁב אֲמָרֶיהָ לוֹ. [אָפַּי הִיא חֹשֶׁב אֲמָרֶיהָ לוֹ] The abstract noun may be followed by the singular verb as in Prov. 9<sup>1</sup>, and we should be able to retain the suff. in תַּעֲנֶנָּה. On the whole, however, the former construction is probably the safer one here. — אָפַּי הִיא חֹשֶׁב אֲמָרֶיהָ לוֹ. The suffix is unusual, but not against the logic of speech; ‡, on the contrary, it seems altogether suitable to the emphasis on the reflexiveness of the action; she returns her answer to herself. It is unnecessary, with Bi., to substitute for the last pronoun לְנַפְשָׁהּ. This is the only interpretation of the words that preserves the parallelism, which is rudely disturbed by making them a parenthetical circumstantial clause; and it is also much more like the poet to make the anxious mother catch at the straw of hope that shall so cruelly disappoint, rather than with too true foresight reject the reasonable answer of her ladies. — 30. [הֲלֹא יִמְצָאוּ] the question carries the affirmation into the mind of the hearer; cf. 4<sup>6, 14</sup> &c. VI.-VIII. Gideon delivers Israel from the Midianites. — The Israelites again offend Yahweh, who allows the Midianites to harry them for seven years. At every harvest time the Bedawin hordes come down upon them and strip the land bare (6<sup>1-6</sup>). The cause of this punishment is explained by a prophet (v.<sup>7-10</sup>). The Messenger of Yahweh appears to Gideon and summons him to free Israel from the incursions of Midian (v.<sup>11-24</sup>). At the bidding of Yahweh, Gideon destroys the altar of the Baal of the place and cuts down and burns the sacred post (asherah); he is saved from the vengeance of his towns-folk by the shrewd speech of his father (v.<sup>25-32</sup>). The Midianites again invade the land, and encamp in the Plain of Jezreel. Gideon raises his clansmen of Abiezer, also the rest of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali; he is assured by a miracle that Yahweh will save Israel by his hand (v.<sup>33-40</sup>). At the command of Yahweh his force is reduced to ten thousand, and then, by a singular test, to three hundred men

(7<sup>1-8</sup>). Encouraged by an ominous dream which he heard a Midianite telling to his tent-mate (v.<sup>9-14</sup>), he furnishes his three hundred men with torches, earthen jars, and horns, and surrounds and alarms the camp of Midian, which breaks up in wild flight (v.<sup>15-22</sup>). While he follows them up, the Ephraimites head them off in the valley of the Jordan and slay the two chiefs (v.<sup>23-25</sup>). Having appeased the jealousy of the Ephraimites (8<sup>1-3</sup>), he pursues the Midianites across the Jordan. The people of Succoth and Penuel refuse him food and are threatened with dire vengeance (v.<sup>4-9</sup>). He surprises the foe where they thought themselves secure and captures the two kings (v.<sup>10-12</sup>). Returning in triumph, he visits exemplary punishment on Succoth and Penuel (v.<sup>13-17</sup>), and puts to death his prisoners to avenge his slain kinsmen (v.<sup>18-21</sup>). He refuses the kingdom which his grateful countrymen offer him (v.<sup>22f</sup>), but takes the golden ornaments they have stripped from the slain and from their camels to make an idol (ephod), which he sets up at Ophrah (v.<sup>24-27</sup>). The Midianites are quelled and dare not lift their heads again; the land is secure for forty years (v.<sup>28</sup>). The story closes with a brief notice of Gideon's family (v.<sup>29-32</sup>) and of the relapse of Israel after his death (v.<sup>33-35</sup>), which forms the connexion with the story of Abimelech, ch. 9.

Studer (1835) called attention to the fact that 8<sup>4ff</sup> is not the sequel of the foregoing narrative. In 7<sup>24f</sup> the Midianites are intercepted in their flight by the Ephraimites, and the two chiefs, Oreb and Zeeb, killed. When Gideon, who is in pursuit of them, comes up, the Ephraimites inveigh violently against him because they were not summoned at the beginning, and are only appeased by his flattering comparison of their achievement with his own: Is not the gleaning of Ephraim better than the vintage of Abiezer? God has given into your hands the two chiefs of Midian; what have I been able to do to compare with you? The quarrel itself, and especially Gideon's reply, show that the pursuit was over; vintage and gleaning were both complete. In 8<sup>4-21</sup>, on the contrary, we find Gideon and his three hundred men following the retreating marauders across the Jordan, with such uncertain prospect of success that the townsmen of Succoth and Penuel scoffingly refuse to furnish the food he needs for his hungry men.

He pushes on, surprises the camp of the Bedawin, and makes prisoners the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna. Nothing can be clearer than that 8<sup>4-21</sup> is not from the same source as 8<sup>1-3</sup> with its premises in the preceding narrative. Closer examination shows that ch. 6, 7 are not of one piece throughout; 6<sup>25ff.</sup>, e.g., is not the continuation of 6<sup>11-24</sup>; the second sign, 6<sup>38-40</sup>, is strange after the miracle 6<sup>21</sup>; compare also 6<sup>34</sup> with 6<sup>35</sup> 7<sup>2-8</sup>, and on the other hand 6<sup>35</sup> with 7<sup>23f.</sup> 8<sup>1.*</sup> The question thus arises whether those parts of ch. 6<sup>1-8</sup> which obviously do not belong to the principal narrative are additions made to the old story by the author of the Book of Judges or later editors; † or whether two stories have been united by a redactor. ‡ In the latter case we have further to inquire whether the antecedents of 8<sup>4-21</sup> are to be found in either of these sources, or whether we have to recognize in 8<sup>4ff.</sup> the end of a third story, whose beginning has been entirely supplanted. § Finally, it is to be asked whether any one, or all, of the sources of these chapters can be identified with the old books of Israelite history which are used in the composition of the Hexateuch. || These questions are as yet far from a definitive solution; the attempt which is made below can claim only the character and value of a critical experiment.

from a second source, from which ch. 9 also is derived.* Bu., whose analysis is adopted by Cornill, finds in ch. 6<sup>1-8</sup> two sources united by a redactor; viz., J 6<sup>2b-6a. 11-24</sup> † 7<sup>1. 9-11. 13.* 14.* 15-22.* 23-25</sup> 8<sup>1-3. 29</sup>; E 6<sup>7-10. 25-32. 36-40</sup>. To the first editor (Rje) he ascribes extensive additions in 6<sup>2-6</sup>, interpolations in 6<sup>11-20</sup>, 6<sup>35</sup> 7<sup>2-8. 12</sup>, the introduction of the horns in 7<sup>15-22</sup>, perhaps the latter part of 8<sup>27</sup>; to Rd the characteristic phrases in 6<sup>1. 2a</sup> 8<sup>28</sup>, perhaps the end of 8<sup>27</sup>. Ch. 84-21 is the end of an independent story, which is not, however, an irreconcilably divergent account of the events narrated in 6<sup>1-8</sup>, but relates to an entirely different occurrence. Bu. rightly declares against the exaggerated contrast drawn by previous critics between 84-21 and 6<sup>1-8</sup>, which makes the latter historically worthless. ‡ It is assumed by all these critics, beginning with Wellhausen, that the antecedents of the story 84-21 cannot be found in 6<sup>1-8</sup>. The postulates of the former are, it is said, of a wholly different kind. Instead of following a divine call to deliver Israel, Gideon has, like Barak (5<sup>12</sup>), a personal wrong to avenge; the Midianites in a foray have killed his brothers (8<sup>18f.</sup>). To avenge their blood he raises his kinsmen of Abiezer, pursues the Bedawin across the Jordan, overtakes and surprises them on the border of the desert, and makes them pay the penalty. The motive, the actors, the scene of the action, are different. But, on the other hand, the resemblances between the two stories are not less striking; the Abiezrites (6<sup>84</sup>), the three hundred men (7<sup>8</sup>), the two chiefs or kings of Midian whose names sound so suspiciously alike, are the real actors in both. The pursuit across the Jordan and surprise in their own desert does not exclude a previous night alarm and flight like that narrated in 7<sup>15ff.</sup> § That Gideon had a wrong of his own to avenge, is not incompatible with the representation that he was called of God to deliver Israel from the scourge; the sharp severing of natural and religious motives is more in the manner of the modern critic than of the ancient storyteller. On the other hand, especially if 6<sup>1-8</sup> are regarded as composite (Bu., Co.), it is very inconvenient to have 84-21 left over; such a remainder may not unfairly be deemed a failure of the solution. The attempt may therefore be made to discover the beginnings of the narrative 84-21 in the preceding chapters. || They are, of course, not to be found in that strand of the story which ends with 7<sup>24-8</sup>, with which 8<sup>29</sup> appears to connect immediately. The account of the night attack on the camp of Midian, 7<sup>15-22</sup>, is composite; the horns are not introduced by the redactor (from Jericho; Bu.), but belong to a different version of the story. ¶ In one account the panic is caused by the shattering of earthen jars, the sudden flashing out of hundreds of torches, the war-cry, For Yahweh and Gideon! The Midianites flee in wild disorder (v.<sup>21</sup>). In the other the camp is alarmed by horns on every side sounding the attack; the Midianites, in the darkness thinking that the Israelites are upon them, lay wildly about them and kill one another (v.<sup>22</sup>).* The antecedents of these two accounts are easily discoverable in 7<sup>1-15</sup>; 7<sup>2-8</sup> belongs to the trumpet version of the story; Gideon's reconnoissance, 7<sup>9-14</sup>, to the other. In ch. 6, Budde's analysis may in the main be followed. Accordingly we have: J, part of the older material incorporated in 6<sup>2-6</sup>, 6<sup>11-24</sup>. 34 7<sup>1</sup>. 9-11. 13-15,† the version of the stratagem in v.<sup>16-20</sup> in which the jars and torches appear, v.<sup>21</sup>, part of v.<sup>22b</sup> describing the direction of the flight, 8<sup>4-21</sup>, v.<sup>24-27a</sup> substantially, v.<sup>30f</sup>: for E, 6<sup>2-6</sup> in part, 6<sup>7-10</sup>. 25 32. 33, [the call of Gideon to deliver Israel], v.<sup>36-40</sup>, v.<sup>35a</sup> (Manasseh), 7<sup>2-8</sup>, that version of v.<sup>16-20</sup> in which the horns play the chief part, v.<sup>22a</sup>. 22b (in part), v.<sup>23</sup>(?) 24f. 31-3. 29. In ascribing this part of the story to E, I do not affirm that it is all by one hand; 6<sup>7-10</sup>, e.g., seems to be one of those secondary pieces which we so often find in E contexts, both in the Hexateuch and the Books of Samuel. The editorial additions in ch. 6-8 (9) are not very extensive or important.

1-6. The Israelites offend Yahweh; he allows the Midianites to overrun and plunder them for seven years.—In this introduction the familiar phrases of D appear in v.<sup>1.6b</sup>; his hand is also probably to be recognized in certain notes of exaggeration in v.<sup>2-5</sup>. The substance of v.<sup>2-6a</sup> must be derived from the old story which runs through the following chapters. The verses are, however, much overloaded, and it is probable that more than one source has been put under contribution.

Arabia which the Israelite historians reckoned to their own race (Abraham), though not of the full blood (the concubine Keturah, Gen. 25<sup>1-6</sup> J), and a step farther removed than the Ishmaelites. The land of Midian, i.e. the district occupied by the settled part of the tribe, was in the northern Hīgāz, east of the Gulf of 'Aqabah, where a town of the name lay. The nomad branches of the tribe wandered northward along the margin of the desert, making forays into the pastures and cultivated tracts of Edom, Moab,‡ and Gilead, and even pouring across the Jordan into Western Palestine. § —

Sam. 13<sup>6</sup>. The word which is omitted in the translation must in the context mean a place of concealment or security; its precise signification is unknown. The meaning ravines, gorges, ascribed to it in the lexicons rests solely on an absurd etymology. The author thus accounts for the abandoned hill-forts and rock dwellings scattered over the land, which perhaps were really the work of a more primitive population. Many remains of this sort are still found east of the Jordan.—3-5. The yearly inroads of the Bedawin robbed the Israelitish peasants of the fruit of their toil and greatly impoverished them.† The verses are not a unit, as appears not only from the awkward surplusage, but from the false sequence of tenses. This redundancy is not altogether due to editorial amplification; both the sources from which the following chapters are derived must have had such an introduction, and probably both have been drawn upon here.—3. The disorder of the text is sufficiently shown by a literal translation: Whenever Israel had sown, Midian used to come up, and Amalek and the Bene Qedem, and (they) used to come up against it (Israel). 4. And they encamped against them (Israel) and destroyed, &c. The confusion of tenses, which in English is only awkward, is in Hebrew ungrammatical. The Amalekites are Bedawin whom we generally meet in the deserts south of Palestine; the Bene Qedem, as their name imports, come from the east, the great Syrian desert. The introduction of the names here is very likely an exaggeration of the editor; cf. on 3<sup>13</sup>. It is possible, however, that the exaggeration already existed in E; cf. v.<sup>33</sup> 7<sup>12</sup>. Of the rest, we may surmise that the frequentative tenses come from one source (?E), the narrative aorists from the other. Following this clue it is possible to construct out of the verses two tolerably complete parallel accounts; but the combination can be made in more than one way, and we cannot feel any confidence that our analysis thus recovers the sources. Euseb., OS<sup>2</sup>. 276<sub>52</sub>.† According to the Arab geographers, it lay five days south of Ailah on the eastern side of the Red Sea.‡ In the Hexateuch, E brings Moses before the Exodus into intimate relations with Jethro, the priest of Midian (Ex. 2<sup>15f</sup>. 18<sup>1ff</sup>). The Mountain of God (Horeb) § was in the land of Midian (Ex. 3<sup>1</sup>); thither Moses led the people from Egypt. Though it is not expressly stated, the narrative of E hardly leaves room for doubt that the Midianites worshipped Yahweh at Horeb before Moses; and the name יתרו, till then unknown to the Israelites and having no natural etymology in their language, is perhaps of Midianite origin. Close relations between Israel and Midian are also indicated by the recurrence of Midianite clan names in Judah, Reuben, and East Manasseh. || The Midianites appear as caravan traders (Gen. 37<sup>28, 36</sup> Is. 60<sup>6</sup>); nomads dwelling in tents (Hab. 3<sup>7</sup>). Nu. 25<sup>6-18</sup> is a substitute for the fragmentary story of the offence at Baal Peor, Nu. 25<sup>1-5</sup> (JE); and, with its sequel ch. 31, has no historical worth; the introduction of the sheikhs of Midian in Nu. 22<sup>4,7</sup> is probably harmonistic. To judge from the echoes in the later literature, the defeat of the Midianites narrated in Jud. ch. 6-8 must have been most disastrous. "The day of Midian" is for Isaiah (9<sup>8</sup>, cf. 10<sup>26</sup>; also Ps. 83<sup>10,12</sup>) synonymous with a signal and irretrievable catastrophe. It has often been surmised, though without any very good grounds, that the defeat inflicted upon them by Hadad of Edom (Gen. 36<sup>35</sup>) fell about the same time. After the time of the Judges the Midianites scarcely reappear in the history. See further, Nöldeke, BL. iv. p. 217 f.; Die Amalekiter, u. s. w., 1864, p. 7 ff. — 2. The oracle of Balaam (Nu. 24<sup>20</sup>) foresees their complete disappearance. A fragmentary notice in 1 Chr. 4<sup>42f</sup>. tells us that a band of Simeonites exterminated the last remnant of the race in their refuge in Mt. 7-10. Yahweh sends a prophet to upbraid the Israelites for their defection. — When the Israelites in their distress cry to Yahweh, he sends a prophet, who calls to mind the great deeds of their god in saving them from Egypt and giving them the land of Canaan, and recites the fundamental law, which here, as in Ex. 20<sup>2f</sup>, has its ground in the great deliverance God has wrought: You shall not adopt the religions of Canaan. This prohibition they have disregarded. Cf. 2<sup>1b-5a</sup> 10<sup>11-16</sup> 1 S. 7<sup>3f</sup> 10<sup>17-19</sup> 12<sup>6-25</sup>.

The speech breaks off abruptly with this introduction. We miss in the words of the prophet the positive accusation and the denunciation of Yahweh's anger, and in the narrative, the result of his reproof, which not only the whole drift and purpose of the speech, but the analogy of similar discourses in Judges and Samuel, leads us to expect; cf. 2<sup>1-5</sup> and especially 10<sup>11-16</sup>. It is not likely that the author left the speech thus without the point which is its reason for being; more probably the conclusion was dropped by the compiler who subjoined v. 11<sup>ff</sup>. from the parallel narrative. The incompleteness of the speech, as well as the evidence of language and style, which in this case is unusually decisive, shows that v. 7-10 are not to be ascribed to the compiler,* but to an Elohist hand.† — 7. On account of Midian] the Hebrew phrase is not very common and is all but confined to E. ‡ — 8. A prophet] lit. a prophet-man; cf. 4<sup>4</sup>. § — Yahweh the God of Israel] 4<sup>6</sup>; corresponding phrases are, I am Yahweh thy God (Ex. 20<sup>2</sup>), and, Yahweh our God (Jos. 24<sup>17</sup>). — I led you up from Egypt and brought you out of the slave house] the place where you were slaves. This deliverance is the origin of the peculiar relation between Yahweh and Israel and the ground of its obligation to keep itself to him only. 11-24. The Call of Gideon. — First account. The Messenger of Yahweh appears to Gideon and summons him to deliver Israel from the Midianites. He protests that the task is beyond his powers, and is assured of the support of Yahweh. Gideon brings food to set before the stranger, at the touch of whose staff fire bursts from the rock and consumes the bread and meat. The visitor vanishes. Gideon recognizes that it was the Messenger of Yahweh and fears for his life. He is reassured, and builds the altar, Yahweh-shalom, which stands in Ophrah.

The passage has no connection with v. 7-10; its premises are rather to be found in v. 2-6. In what follows, v. 25-32 is not the sequel of v. 11-24, but a second account of the call of Gideon and the building of the altar. The closest parallels to v. 11-24 are the appearance of Messenger of Yahweh to the parents of Samson, Jud. 13<sup>2-23</sup>, and the appearance of Yahweh to Abraham at the sacred trees of Mamre, Gen. 18<sup>1ff.</sup> (J). In Jud. 6<sup>11-24</sup> 13<sup>2-23</sup> the whole conception and representation, as well as the more external features of language and style, strongly resemble the Yahwistic narratives of the Hexateuch, and the passages are with considerable probability ascribed by Böhme, Budde, and Cornill to the same author.*

The narrative has suffered some changes at the hand of the redactor or later editor, the distinctive note of which is the anticipation of Gideon's recognition of his visitor (v.<sup>22a</sup>). In the attempt to separate these secondary elements and restore the original context, Böhme undoubtedly goes too far;† Budde's analysis is more conservative, but still perhaps subtracts more than is necessary.‡ Verse 17<sup>b</sup>, in which Gideon already recognizes the Messenger, but wishes to have the confirmation of a miracle, is clearly not original. Verse 20, in which the flesh and the cakes are disposed on the rock as on an altar and the broth poured out as a libation, is also secondary. Corresponding changes have not improbably been made in v.<sup>16</sup>, and in v.<sup>18. 19</sup>.

11. The Messenger of Yahweh] 2<sup>1</sup> 5<sup>23</sup> 13<sup>3ff.</sup>. The Mal'ak Yahweh is a theophany. In all the old accounts of such appearances the mal'ak is, first or last, identified with the deity; see Gen. 16<sup>7-14</sup> 21<sup>17-19</sup> 22<sup>11-14. 15-18</sup> 31<sup>11-13</sup> Ex. 3<sup>2ff.</sup> Jud. h. l., 13<sup>3ff.</sup>; cf. also Gen. 32<sup>24-30</sup> with Hos. 12<sup>4ff.</sup>, Gen. 48<sup>15. 16</sup>; further Gen. 18. 19, in which Yahweh appears precisely as elsewhere the Mal'ak Yahweh. In the Yahwistic narratives in the Pentateuch, as in Judges ch. 6 and 13, the Messenger of Yahweh appears in human form and converses freely

* The resemblance is admitted by Kuc. (HCO<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 355), who questions the validity of Böhme's inference. Kitt. (*Stud. u. The exx. cited above (Ex. 3<sup>20</sup> 34<sup>10</sup> Jos. 3<sup>5</sup>) all occur in Yahwist contexts. In the passage before us the words, if not original (J, cf. the Hiphil 13<sup>19</sup>), must be ascribed to Rje, not to Rd, in whom the word seems not to occur. — ועתה נשנו יהוה] can hardly be separated from the foregoing (Bu.), but stands or falls with it. Since the visitor does not reveal himself in his true character till v.<sup>21</sup>, we should expect rather, doth not Yahweh send thee? cf. 4<sup>6</sup>. We may suppose either that Gideon took his visitor for a man of God (cf. 13<sup>6</sup>), or, more probably, that the author lapsed from strict dramatic propriety; see also on v.<sup>10</sup>. — 15. Gideon remonstrates that he is not equal to the task. — How (by what means) should I deliver Israel? My sept is the poorest in Manasseh, and I the most insignificant man in my family] cf. 1 S. 9<sup>21</sup>. The protestation is, no more than that of Saul, to be taken too literally. Both the following narratives assume that the hero's family was one of rank and influence in the clan. — 16. Yahweh said to him, Surely I will be with thee] ὁ ἄγγελος κυρίου, the Angel of the Lord said to him, the Lord will be with thee. If it be thought too violent a supposition that the author here, as in v.<sup>14</sup>, used the first person in conformity with the knowledge of his readers that the speaker was Yahweh, rather than with Gideon's supposed ignorance of that fact, we may conjecture that the original text was simply, and he said, Yahweh will be with thee, ‡ and that in supplying the explicit subject and recasting the sentence to correspond with it, the editor of H had Ex. 3<sup>12</sup> in mind. — As one man] Nu. 14<sup>15</sup>. — 17. Gideon asks the stranger to wait till he can set food before him, and prepares him a meal; cf. The half-verse thus anticipates v.<sup>21f</sup> in a way that the author of the latter verses cannot have done; v.<sup>18a</sup> connects immediately with v.<sup>17a</sup>, just as Gen. 18<sup>3a</sup> does with v.<sup>3b.4</sup>, and has no ulterior purpose. Gen. 18<sup>8</sup>. Böhme and Budde ascribe the half verse (Bu. excepts, and brought it out to him under the tree) to the redaction. It seems improbable, however, that these concrete details, which are not essential to the conception of an offering, or, indeed, consonant with ritual customs, were introduced by an editor.

15. אֲרִי [בִּי אֲרִי] the pronunciation, in distinction from אֲרִי v. 13, means to intimate that Gideon now recognizes his visitor as divine. — אֵלָּהּ אֵלֵּיךָ is, like משפחה, a branch of a tribe (שֵׁבֶט) larger than the family (בֵּית אָב); see 1 S. 10<sup>19-21</sup>. — הַנְּעִיר 1 S. 9<sup>21</sup>; often in the sense minor natu, Gen. 25<sup>23</sup> 43<sup>33</sup> 48<sup>14</sup> &c. — 16. כִּי אֵחָהּ עִמָּךְ verbatim Ex. 3<sup>12</sup>. Böhme ascribes v. 18<sup>aβ</sup> (and bring out my offering and set it before thee) to an editor; Bu. thinks that the editor has changed the original object of the verb (food; cf. Gen. 18<sup>5</sup> Jud. 13<sup>15</sup>) into a religious offering. Böhme (l.c. p. 254) rejects v.<sup>19a</sup> with v.<sup>20</sup>; the broth was introduced by some one who thought a libation indispensable; the whole representation presumes that a religious offering is intended. So Bu. also. But if the object was to convert Gideon's hospitality into a sacrifice, it would have been done unmistakably. In no ritual that we know was meat presented in a basket (as unleavened cakes were) or a libation made of broth. It is conceivable that such rites existed in this early time; † but not that such a description proceeds from a late editor. I find in the words, however, no certain evidence of a sacrificial intention; even וַיָּבֵשׁ is properly used of bringing food to one, putting it within his reach (Gen. 27<sup>25</sup>).

20, 21. The food which Gideon brings out is converted into an offering. Fire from the rock consumes it; the Messenger vanishes. — 20. Messenger of God, instead of Messenger of Yahweh, is striking, and with some other peculiarities of expression arouses the suspicion that the verse is by a different hand. This suspicion is strengthened by the contents of the verse; and Böhme and Budde are probably right in regarding it as a later addition to the story. Verse<sup>21</sup> connects equally well with v.<sup>19</sup>. See further in crit. note. — 21. The Messenger touches the food with the tip of his walking-stick, at which fire springs up from the rock and consumes it; cf. 1 K. 18<sup>38</sup> 2 Chr. 7<sup>1</sup> 2 Macc. 2<sup>10-13</sup> Lev. 9<sup>24</sup>. — The Messenger of Yahweh passed from his sight this is in conflict with v.<sup>22, 23</sup>, in which Gideon addresses his visitor and is answered by him as though still present. Stade (GVI. i. p. 183 f.) thinks the verses possibly the close of a lost account of the origin of the holy place at Ophrah. But when the changes made by editorial hands in the preceding verses are recognized, v.<sup>22-24</sup> is seen to be the natural and almost indispensable close of the narrative before us in v.<sup>14ff.</sup>

25-32. Call of Gideon. — Second account. Yahweh calls Gideon first of all to destroy the altar of Baal which belongs to his father and the sacred post (asherah) that stands beside it; to build on a designated spot an altar of Yahweh, and offer upon it a certain bullock as a dedicatory sacrifice. He does so by night. When the sacrilege is discovered and its perpetrator detected, the townspeople demand that he be put to death. His father Joash persuades them to leave it to Baal to avenge the outrage done him, "If he is a god let him take his own part." The oracular words of Joash, who as the custodian of the holy place was naturally the priest of Baal, explain the name Jerubbaal.

These verses are loosely joined to the foregoing by the words, in that night (cf. 7<sup>9</sup>), but so far from being the continuation of v.<sup>11-24</sup>, v.<sup>25-32</sup> belong to a second and altogether different account of the call of Gideon. The writer who narrates in v.<sup>24</sup> the building of the altar, Yahweh-shalom, cannot have gone on to relate the building of another altar of Yahweh in v.<sup>25ff.</sup>, nor did the author of the latter verses have before him v.<sup>21-24</sup>. In v.<sup>11</sup> the holy tree at Ophrah, on the land of Joash, is the sacred spot where Yahweh appears, and there is no intimation that Israel is addicted to heathenish cults, or that its calamities are the punishment of defection; in v.<sup>25ff.</sup> Joash is the proprietary custodian of the village altar of Baal with its sacred post (asherah), and these must be destroyed before Yahweh will deliver his people. The premises of v.<sup>25-32</sup> are to be found rather in v.<sup>7-10</sup>. The latter verses break off abruptly (see p. 181). We may infer from the analogous passages (2<sup>1b-5a</sup> 10<sup>11-16</sup> 1 S. 7<sup>8ff.</sup> 10<sup>17-19</sup> 12<sup>6ff.</sup>) that in the original connexion the prophet went on to upbraid them more specifically for their lapse into heathenism (worship of Baal), and to declare that it was for this that Yahweh had given them over to their foes. As a sequel to this, Gideon is called to begin the reformation by destroying the village altar of Baal and restoring the abandoned worship of Yahweh. Budde appears to me to be right in seeing in v.<sup>25-32</sup>, not a free amplification of the story by a later author,* but part of a parallel narrative, which may with considerable probability be ascribed to E.

25. That night] cf. 2 S. 7<sup>4</sup> 2 K. 19<sup>35</sup>. In the present connexion, the night after the appearance of the Messenger of Yahweh to Gideon; originally, if our analysis is correct, the night after the prophet delivered his reproof (v.<sup>7-10</sup>).—Verse <sup>25a</sup> speaks apparently of two bullocks, and in the sequel we read of the sacrifice of the second bullock (v.<sup>26.28</sup>); but what is to be done with the other does not appear. The text is unintelligible, and no satisfactory emendation has been suggested. Kuenen † proposed to restore, with the aid of v.<sup>27</sup>, Take ten men of thy servants and a bullock of seven years, but it is difficult to imagine how this could have been so corrupted. See critical note.—Pull down the altar of Baal which thy father has, and cut down the sacred post which is by it] the altar was the holy place of the town (v.<sup>28ff.</sup>); Joash was its custodian by proprietary right, as the family of Micah would have become of his temple in Mt. Ephraim (17<sup>5ff.</sup>), or as Gideon's descendants would have been of the image of Yahweh in Ophrah (8<sup>27</sup>). ‡ — On Baal see above on 2<sup>13</sup> (p. 69 f.). — The sacred post which is by it] the sacred post (asherah) was of wood, and, if we may argue from v.<sup>26</sup>, of considerable size. Such posts seem to have belonged to every Canaanite place of worship (Ex. 34<sup>13</sup>, altars, steles, asherahs, Dt. 12<sup>3</sup> 1 K. 14<sup>23</sup> 2 K. 17<sup>10</sup> Is. 17<sup>8</sup>), and in old times stood not only beside the altars of the Baals, but by those of Yahweh (Dt. 16<sup>21</sup>), even in the temple at Jerusalem (2 K. 21<sup>7</sup> 23<sup>6</sup>). According to Jewish tradition the asherah might be a living tree, and many modern scholars infer as much from Dt. 16<sup>21</sup>; but usually, beyond question, it was a post or mast. The shape of the asherah is not certainly known; but it is not improbable that asherahs are represented by the posts of varying forms, often with a conical top, which occur so frequently in sacrificial scenes on Assyrian marbles, and on Assyrian, Phoenician, and Cypriote seals and gems.* The origin and meaning of the asherah are also involved in obscurity. — 26. Gideon is directed to build an altar to Yahweh on a different site. — On the highest point of this stronghold] the word which follows is not intelligible in this context; either it is a technical term the meaning of which is lost, or, as seems more likely, the text is at fault. It is to be presumed that, as in the parallel narrative (v.<sup>24</sup>), the writer has in mind an altar standing in his day, and that the words describe its site. He is to dedicate the altar by the sacrifice of a bullock, using for fuel the wood of the sacred post which he has cut down. The whole burnt offering is the proper dedicatory sacrifice. — The second bullock] v.<sup>28</sup>. The words are grammatically unimpeachable, but the disorder of v.<sup>25</sup> makes it doubtful whether they are correct; not improbably the second is interpolated in both verses, to conform to the (corrupt) text of v.<sup>25</sup>.

25. That the text is corrupt should need no demonstration; פר השור and פר השני שבע שנים are meaningless and grammatically impossible collocations of words. The second bullock of seven years old (EV., following GLS) † would be בן שבע שנים. As nothing is said in the sequel about any other bullock, many interpreters infer that only one is spoken of here, and translate, Take the bullock which belongs to thy father, even the second bullock, &c.; so Trem.-Jun., Pisc., AV., RV., Ke., al.; the conjunction is explained in the same way (et quidem) by Ew., Stud. (cf. RJes.); it is omitted by GALM. Ingenious, but improbable explanations of the second bullock (second calf of its dam) are given by Abulw., Tanch. (on 1 S. 15<sup>9</sup>); cf. Ki., Roed. (Ges. Thes. p. 1451), Bö., al. RJes. and Stud. interpret fatted; Ew. connects שני with שנה in the sense, annosus. The word is omitted by MNPV sub ast. s; apparently פר השור and פר השני are doublets, and both corrupt. ש suggests the conjecture הפר השמן (cf. 1 S. 15<sup>9</sup>, We., Dr.), but the corruption is probably deeper. With the seven years it seems impossible to do anything at all; cf. ט, Temurah, 28<sup>b</sup>, Ra., RJes., al.; Hitzig conjectured that they were accidentally introduced from 61. — והאשרה אשר עליו הכרה — not upon the altar, but beside it. אשרה almost uniformly ἄλσος Lucus AV. grave; RV. Asherah, explained (Ex. 34<sup>18</sup> mg.), the wooden symbols of a goddess Asherah. Job 13<sup>8</sup>. — If he is a god, let him take his own part] deorum injuriae dis curae.† In the thought of the writer, which, however, we must beware of attributing to Joash, the words have an ironical point; Baal's inability to defend himself is a proof that he is no god; cf. 1 K. 18<sup>21-29</sup>. The conditional sentence would naturally follow immediately upon the question in v.<sup>a</sup>: Will you take Baal's part? will you defend him? If he is a god, let him take his own part. This obvious connexion is broken by the sentence which is interposed: Whoever takes up his (Baal's) quarrel shall be put to death by morning] in these words, the difficulty of which cannot be evaded by a different translation, Joash appears to threaten with death any one who rashly puts himself forward as the champion of Baal; he will defend his son by force if need be.‡ This would be in itself a conceivable sequel to his question; but a very tame one compared with v.<sup>b</sup>, If he is a god, &c.; both cannot be original. Probably, therefore, the intruding words were added here by an editor or scribe; perhaps originally a gloss intended for a different place or in a different sense. At the end of the verse the words, because he pulled down his altar, seem to have been repeated from v.<sup>32b</sup> with superfluous explicitness. — 32. say, Let Baal contend with him, because he pulled down his altar] Jerubbaal is another name of Gideon ( $\gamma^1$  8<sup>20, 35</sup> 9 passim); in the present shape of the narrative the relation between the two is not clear. For a hypothesis about the use of the names in the older stories of J and E, see on  $\gamma^1$ . For several centuries after the occupation of Canaan the word ba'al (proprietor) was used by the Israelites as innocently as el (numen) or adōn (lord), and men whose loyalty to Yahweh is above suspicion gave baal-names to their children. Saul had a son Ishbaal; Jonathan, a son Meribaal; David, a son Baaljada. As in similar compounds of el and adōn, the unnamed deity is no other than Yahweh. So, doubtless, it was with Jerubbaal. In later times, through the operation of causes which we cannot develop here, the baals of Canaan are set over against Yahweh the God of Israel, and the name baal becomes the very signature of heathenism. The old proper names compounded with baal then became a stumbling block, and in our texts are generally mutilated. Jerubbaal becomes Jerubbesheth (2 S. 11<sup>21</sup>), as Ishbaal is perverted into Ishbosheth.\* In our text also it is assumed that the Canaanite Baal (v. 25<sup>ff.</sup>) is meant, but by an ingenious etymology the name is made to signify, Adversary of Baal.

[יָרִיב לוֹ]), and this etymology is accepted by many modern scholars (Baal contends; Kue., Dr., Baethgen). This seems to be excluded, however, by the fact that the impf. of יָרִיב is yarīb (twice in this verse), and that no trace of an alternative yarūb exists. We. (TBS. p. 31), with greater probability, thinks that the name is formed like יָרִיב לוֹ, † in meaning equivalent to יָרִיב לוֹ, 'Yahweh founds.' ‡

33-35. The Midianites invade the land; Gideon summons his countrymen to resist them. — The hordes of Midian and its allies cross the Jordan and encamp in the Great Plain. The spirit of Yahweh fills Gideon; he raises his clan, Abiezer; then his tribe Manasseh; finally, he calls out the tribes north of the plain, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali. Verse<sup>34</sup> belongs to the first narrative (v. 11-24, J) and may originally have followed immediately upon v. 24; in this narrative the description of the invasion preceded the appearance of the Messenger of Yahweh to Gideon (v. 11b). Verse<sup>33</sup> may then be from the hand of E, who, if our surmise be correct, || described at the beginning in general terms the annual forays of Midian, and might therefore appropriately relate here particulars of their last invasion. The author of 7<sup>2-8</sup> must have narrated how Gideon called out at least his own tribe, Manasseh, and, if we may argue from the numbers, probably others; but this account would naturally stand after 6<sup>36-40</sup>, in which Gideon, who seems to be at home, seeks the assurance of a sign that he is truly called of God to deliver Israel. Verse<sup>35</sup> may, therefore, be derived in part from E, but has been attracted from its original position by the parallel v. 34; the number of tribes called out is probably exaggerated by the redactor. Certainly, in its present form, 6<sup>35</sup> is in conflict with 7<sup>23</sup>; but we cannot be confident that the latter verse is original. On the other hand, v.<sup>30</sup> must have been preceded in E by an account of the calling of Gideon to deliver Israel, which has been omitted by Rje as superfluous after 6<sup>11-24</sup>.

West Manasseh only can be meant. — Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali] see on 1<sup>30-33</sup> (p. 49 f.); here, as in ch. 1 and 4, Issachar is passed over. The two halves of the verse are constructed on the same model; ‡ the second is perhaps an exaggerating addition. In 7<sup>23</sup> Naphtali, Asher, and Manasseh are called out after the success of Gideon's stratagem, to pursue the fleeing foe. It is hardly possible that both verses are original. — They went up to meet them] may be from E's narrative: He sent messengers through all Manasseh, and they went up to meet the Midianites. — Went up, in the military sense; marched against them. In the present connexion the words form an awkward parallel to the end of v.<sup>a</sup>.

36-40. The sign of the fleece. — Gideon asks a sign that God will deliver Israel by his hand. A fleece exposed at night on the threshing floor is drenched with dew, while the ground around is dry. In a second test the fleece alone is dry, while the ground is wet with dew. It is scarcely to be supposed that after the wonderful manifestation of the Messenger of Yahweh, v. 21-23, Gideon ventured to require another sign; the premises of v. 36-40 are not to be sought in v. 11-24, but in the missing parallel account of the call of Gideon, in which the summons to be the champion of Israel probably came, not through the Messenger of Yahweh, but, as commonly in E, in a dream or night vision.* A revelation of this kind may well require the attestation of a tangible sign such as Gideon here proposes. This hypothesis is confirmed by the fact that in v. 36-40, in contrast with v. 11-24, we have without exception Elohim (v. 40) and ha-Elohim (v. 36, 39) instead of Yahweh and Mal'ak Yahweh. We may, therefore, with much probability attribute v. 36-40 to E.

The test resulted as he had proposed; in the morning he squeezed the fleece and drained out of it dew enough to fill a bowl with water. — 39, 40. To make sure that this was not due to some natural cause, he proposes to invert the experiment; this time the fleece alone shall be dry, while all the ground is covered with dew. On the following morning he finds it so.

VII. 1-8. Gideon's numbers are reduced to three hundred men.—Gideon, with thirty-two thousand men, encamps near the enemy, at Ain Harod. At the command of Yahweh, who will not have the victory attributed to human might and prowess, Gideon dismisses all who fear the encounter. Of the ten thousand that remain, three hundred are picked out by a singular test; these are furnished with the provisions and the horns of the rest, who are dismissed to their homes. The great numbers presuppose the raising of more than one tribe (6<sup>35</sup>), and, like that verse, conflict with 7<sup>23f</sup>, where the tribes are called out after the success of Gideon's attack, to pursue the fleeing enemy and intercept their retreat. The aim of the whole story (v. 2-6) seems to be to enforce the lesson that it is as easy for Yahweh to deliver by few as by many (1 S. 14<sup>6</sup>), and that to rebuke man's vaingloriousness he chooses the weak things of the world to put to shame the strong (1 Cor. 1<sup>25-27</sup>; Studer). The verses seem to be from E, and belong perhaps to a secondary stratum of that work.* Verse<sup>1</sup>, on the other hand, seems to be the continuation of 6<sup>34</sup>, and to be continued in 7<sup>23f</sup>.—1. While the camp of Midian was north of Gibeath ha-Moreh] the text has, north of him, from Gibeath ha-Moreh, in the plain, which cannot be right. The cause of the disorder is perhaps contamination from v.<sup>8</sup>. In our ignorance of the topography, the restoration is merely conjectural. As 6<sup>33</sup> locates the camp of the Midianites in the Plain of Jezreel, Ain Harod and Gibeath ha-Moreh have naturally been looked for there. Stanley would find the former in 'Ain Gālūd, a very copious spring at the foot of Gilboa, about half an hour east of * Bu. ascribes them to Rje; see above, p. 176,

Jezreel (Zer'in).* Gibeath ha-Moreh is then supposed to be the hill now called Nebi Daḥī, on the northern side of the valley, above Sōlem (Shunem). The positions would thus be very much the same which were occupied by Saul and the Philistines before the battle of Mt. Gilboa (1 S. 28<sup>4</sup> cf. 29<sup>1</sup>). These conjectures rest, however, on a most insecure foundation. Ch. 6<sup>33</sup> is not from the same source as 7<sup>1</sup>, and it is not certain that the author of the latter (J) laid the scene of action in the Plain of Jezreel. The name Moreh occurs elsewhere only in the neighbourhood of Shechem (Gen. 12<sup>6</sup> Dt. 11<sup>30</sup>), and, in the absence of any other clue, it is the least hazardous supposition that the same place is meant here. The other indications in J agree very well with this hypothesis. In this narrative Gideon has behind him his clan, Abiezer, whose seats are about Ophrah, probably not very far from Shechem.† In his pursuit of the Midianites he crosses the Jordan not far from Succoth, by the fords ordinarily taken between Shechem and Gilead (Gen. 33<sup>17, 18-20</sup>; see below on 8<sup>5</sup>), as he would do if he had come down by Wady Fār'ah; the composite verse 7<sup>23</sup> shows that the direction of the flight and pursuit was differently described in the two sources.‡

1. ירבעל הוא גרעון if Gideon had been original here and Ferubbaal been introduced by a subsequent hand (Kitt.), we should have had, And Gideon, that is, Ferubbaal.—[עין חרר] cf. the gentile, חררי 2 S. 23<sup>25</sup> (1 Chr. 11<sup>27</sup>). It seems to me more probable that combination with v. 8<sup>a</sup> is responsible for the disorder of the text, and I should prefer to restore לגבעת המורה, omitting לו and בעמק. Another possibility היה לו מצפון מגבעת המורה. — 'Ain Ġālūd was early supposed to be the scene of David's fight with Goliath (Ilin. Hierosol.). § Eshtori Parchi (fol. 67r) calls this a Moslem blunder. It is more likely that the similarity of the name was the occasion of the error, than that a mislocation of the conflict with the Philistines (under the influence of 1 S. 28<sup>4</sup>) gave rise to the name. 'Ain Ġālūd is often identified with the Tubania of the Talmud and the crusading historians; Eshtori Parchi rightly distinguishes them, and 'Ain Tuba'un is in fact about a mile NE. of 'Ain Ġālūd (*SWP. Dt. 20<sup>8</sup>; a similar measure with a different motive. The second verb (h̄arad) perhaps plays upon the name Harod, though it is not intimated that the name is derived from this terror.* The following words, translated in RV., and depart† from Mt. Gilead, present great difficulty. The meaning of the verb, which is found only here, is unknown, and the mention of Mt. Gilead (east of the Jordan, 5<sup>17</sup>) is quite irreconcilable with the topography of the story. The emendation of Clericus, Gilboa, would bring the situation into accord with 6<sup>33</sup>; but if Gideon was, as is supposed, encamped on Mt. Gilboa, the direction to return home from Mt. Gilboa is entirely superfluous.‡ Ewald surmises that the words are an old proverbial saying in East Manasseh, in the present context meaning no more than "slink from the field of battle."§ But the use of such an expression by the writer, without explanation, would simply invite misunderstanding. — Twenty-two thousand men availed themselves of this permission; ten thousand remained with Gideon. — 4. The numbers are still too great; Yahweh prescribes a new test. — Take them down to the waters, and let me separate them for thee there] remove the inferior elements which are not fit for the high enterprise; the figure is taken from the refining of the precious metals by smelting out the baser admixture of the ore; Is. 1<sup>25</sup> Mal. 3<sup>2, 3</sup>. Those who throw themselves flat on the ground, with their faces to the water, and lap it up with their tongues like dogs, are to be set by themselves, and those who kneel down to drink (from their hands), by themselves. — 6. The number of those who lapped with their hands to their mouths amounted to three hundred men] the words, with their hands to their mouths, are as G shows, a gloss, and in this place an erroneous gloss; to lap with the tongue, and to raise water to the mouth with the hand, are precisely the two different ways of drinking which are here distinguished. Perhaps the words were meant to stand at the end of v.<sup>6</sup>, where they would be a correct explanation; see note. The contradiction at this point between v.<sup>5</sup> and v.<sup>6</sup> has involved the whole interpretation in obscurity. Clericus imagines the three hundred drinking standing: * intelliguntur qui manu aquam hauserant, eamque e manu stantes bibebant, nequaquam inflexis genibus; they were the hardy warriors who did not yield to their thirst,† or were too eager to be at the enemy to stop even to drink. Josephus, on the contrary, thinks that they were the greatest cowards in the army, who in the presence of the foe were afraid to drink in the usual manner.‡ The miraculous character of the deliverance is thus heightened. The interpretations are equally far-fetched; if any significance is to be attached to the way in which the three hundred drink, we should find it in the comparison to dogs (v.<sup>5</sup>); they were the rude, fierce men; compare the name Caleb.§ It is doubtful, however, whether the character of the three hundred is in the writer's mind at all. — 7. Yahweh will deliver Israel by means of the three hundred; all the rest of the people shall go to their homes. — 8. Those who are sent home leave their provisions and their horns with Gideon, who is thus enabled to furnish each of his three hundred men with a horn. The verse is clearly written with reference to v.<sup>16f</sup>, to explain how Gideon came to have so many horns at his disposal. The repeated change in the subject of the verbs is harsh and the text is in at least one place at fault. Perhaps v.<sup>a</sup> in its present form is the work of a redactor, who is preparing for v.<sup>16-22</sup>; see note. — The camp of Midian was below him in the valley] corresponds to v.<sup>1</sup>, and is E's introduction to the surprise of the Midianite camp in v.<sup>16-22</sup>.

or 'spring, bound'; so SS. The context would make the general meaning of the verb sufficiently clear if the following words מחר הגלעד were intelligible in this place. JDMich. conj. מחר, flee quickly to Mt. Gilead; but this is both intrinsically improbable and in direct conflict with v.<sup>7.8</sup>. Cler. proposed מחר הגלבע, from Mt. Gilboa, which is adopted by Hitz., Be., Graetz, Ke., Doorn., Reuss, al.; but Dathe and Stud. rightly observe that the words are then meaningless. Ewald's old Manassite saying, in which Gilead is used proverbially for the battlefield, is without the slightest foundation or plausibility. Cass. elaborates a somewhat similar theory. Stud.'s explanation is, that, as the Midianites in the Plain of Jezreel lay between the men of the northern tribes (6<sup>85</sup>) and their homes, they are bidden to cross the Jordan, and by a circuit through Mt. Gilead go around the enemy. But if this was the author's meaning he could not have expressed himself more obscurely. If a conjecture may be ventured in this state of the text, I would suggest, ויצמר גידן Gideon put them to the test; for the verb cf. v.<sup>4</sup> † — 5. ככל אשר ילק בלשונ מן המים לקק (onomatopoetic) 1 K. 21<sup>19</sup> (bis) 22<sup>38</sup>; cf. להך Nu. 22<sup>4</sup> &c.; ὁ δὲ πῶς τὸν ὕδατος, better than ἐκ (GAVLM). — [תצין אותו לבר of persons, Gen. 33<sup>15</sup> 43<sup>9</sup> 47<sup>2</sup>; cf. of things Jud. 6<sup>37</sup> 8<sup>27</sup>; see note on the latter verse. לבר without suffix, Ex. 26<sup>9</sup> 36<sup>16</sup> Zech. 12<sup>12.13.14</sup>. — [וכל אשר יכרע וג' the vb. see on 5<sup>27</sup>. In its place G<sup>ALM</sup> I ε have the correct gloss ἐν τῇ γλώσση αὐτῶν; conflation of the two in G<sup>PVO</sup> g. Perhaps the gloss in H was meant for the end of v.<sup>6</sup>, where it would be right in fact (Doorn.); hardly genuine at the end of v.<sup>5</sup> (Bu.), against which the change of number seems conclusive; at the end of v.<sup>5</sup>, whether the words were genuine or a gloss, we should expect אֵל פִּי. — 8. The change of subject in וַיִּקְרָא is abrupt and awkward; only less so, that יָצָא v.<sup>8</sup>; צִרָה הֵעָם is incorrect. For the latter, the emendation הֵעָם (or צִרָה Jos. 9<sup>b</sup>. 14) would suffice to remove the grammatical difficulty; but the statement that the three hundred took the provisions of the rest of the people is not obviously relevant. Gideon was not planning a long campaign and had no need to encumber his three hundred men with the rations of ten thousand. If the author meant to explain how Gideon's men got the jars of v.<sup>16ff.</sup> as well as the horns, he would hardly have said it so indirectly, especially as the provisions were certainly not transported in earthen jars. If we were sure that such was his intention, we should without hesitation emend וַיִּקְרָא הֵעָם, with which בִּידִם also would better accord. But as in v.<sup>16-22</sup> the horns come from one version of the stratagem, the jars from the other, this emendation or interpretation would constrain us to regard v.<sup>8a</sup> as the work of a redactor displacing the original beginning of the verse, in which the name of Gideon probably stood. If v.<sup>16-22</sup> were homogeneous, v.<sup>8a</sup> might be restored: וַיִּקְרָא אֶת בִּידִם, which would remove all formal difficulties. — [אִישׁ לְאֹהֶלָיו] 1 S. 13<sup>2</sup> 4<sup>10</sup> 2 S. 19<sup>9</sup>, לְאֹהֶלָיו Jud. 20<sup>8</sup>; cf. לְמִקְוֵהוּ v.<sup>7</sup> 9<sup>35</sup> &c. The precise meaning of the word translated armed men is uncertain; cf. Ex. 13<sup>18</sup> Jos. 1<sup>14</sup> 4<sup>12</sup>. The immense numbers of the invaders; cf. 6<sup>3-5</sup> 8<sup>10</sup>. It is probably meant, not of the camels, but of the enemy themselves; but it hangs very loosely at the end of the verse and may be an addition by a still later hand. — 13. Just as Gideon came within hearing, a Midianite was telling his comrade a dream. — A cake of barley bread] the specific meaning of the word rendered from the context, cake or loaf, is not known. We are probably to imagine a round, flat, hard-baked ash-cake, trundling through the camp till it strikes the tent and turns it upside down. The tent is the natural symbol of the nomad; the barley cake might very well represent the peasant. As barley is an inferior grain, many interpreters find in the words a scornful allusion to the poverty of the Israelite peasantry, who were reduced to eating what is fit food only for animals. It is doubtful, however, whether this is intended; there seems to have been a particular kind of barley ash-cake or griddle-bread (Ez. 4<sup>12</sup>), and šetul may be the specific name for a cake of peculiar shape or solidity, which was made of barley meal. — It came to the tent] not the tent of the head chief,* but that of the narrator, or, perhaps better, in view of the symbolical character of the dream, to a tent. The definite article is idiomatically used in Hebrew when an object is made definite in the imagination of the speaker by what is done with or to it in the story. — And struck it, and it fell, and turned it upside down, and the tent lay prostrate] the words printed in Roman letters are redundant; comparison with ו, and, in the latter instance, the false tense in ו, show that they are glosses. — 14. His comrade interprets the portent. — This is nothing else than the men of Israel] the text has, the sword of Gideon

ben Joash, the man of Israel; but this is a later and erroneous interpretation. The barley bread naturally represents the peasantry as a class, not an individual among them; the Hebrew phrase translated the men of Israel is uniformly collective; and it is hardly likely that the first narrator made his Midianites know by name the deliverer whom Yahweh had just called from the flail. The words, the sword of, may be original, but more probably they come from v.<sup>20</sup>. — God has given into his hand Midian and all the camp] God, not Yahweh, is proper in the mouth of a foreigner; cf. 3<sup>20</sup>. Amplification by the editor may be suspected here also. Midian and all the camp is redundant, and, of the two, the order of the sentence indicates that the latter is original; it also corresponds to the description of the portent (v.<sup>13</sup>). Midian and is perhaps from the same hand which over-filled the first half of the verse by the insertion of Gideon's name. — 15. 16-22. Gideon's stratagem; panic and flight of the Midianites. — The narration is redundant and confused. To carry a lighted torch concealed in an earthen jar would give full occupation to both hands; how Gideon's men managed the horns besides does not appear.† Kuenen thinks that the torches and jars may have been added by the editor.‡ Budde recognizes in them an original and characteristic feature of the story; in his opinion it is rather the horns, "which come from Jericho," that the editor has brought in. The following narrative, however, gives plain evidence, not of editorial amplification, but of the attempt to combine two accounts. This is particularly clear at the beginning and end of the passage (v.<sup>17</sup>, v.<sup>21.22</sup>). The doubling is such as the mere introduction of the horns would not produce; and further, as Kuenen rightly saw, the blowing of the horns now constitutes the principal strand of the narrative. We have found above two accounts of the call of Gideon and of the raising of his countrymen against Midian. In the sequel of the story, not only 7<sup>23ff.</sup> but 8<sup>4ff.</sup> represents the enemy as in full flight.* The source from which the latter is derived also presumably told how they were put to flight; and as from 8<sup>11ff.</sup> it does not appear that they had previously sustained an actual attack, it may be inferred that they had been alarmed by a stratagem such as is described in 7<sup>16-22</sup>. These facts seem to commend the hypothesis that the trumpets are derived from one source, the jars and torches from the other. The former may with considerable probability be ascribed to E; the latter will then come from J. If the latter, as there is some reason to believe,† laid the scene of action, not in the Plain of Jezreel, but in the vicinity of Ophrah, the execution of this original manœuvre is more easily conceivable; the jars could be fetched by Gideon's clansmen from their homes for this purpose. The redactor has united the two diverse accounts as best he could, binding them together with clauses borrowed from one or the other of his sources. That in which the trumpets play the leading part, being the more detailed, furnished the warp of his fabric.

To E may be ascribed: v. 16a, ba [and said to them] 17b. 18a, ba. 19a, ba. 20aa. 22a (וישם ירוה) 22b (in part) 23ff. J's narrative, which is less completely preserved, probably ran somewhat as follows: [He gave them, or, they took] empty jars, and torches in the jars (v. 16bβ); and he said to them, See from me what to do, and do likewise (v. 17a). [They surrounded the camp; Gideon gave the signal by breaking his jar (? v. 19bβ)]; ‡ and they broke the jars and grasped the torches (? in their left hands, and in their right their swords?) and cried, For Yahweh and Gideon! (v. 20aβ, b*). And they stood as they were around the camp, and all the camp ran away. And they fled (v. 21) to . . . (v. 22 in part). § to one version of the story (E), the jars and torches to the other (J) ; see above. The horns, and perhaps the jars also, are provided for in v.<sup>8a</sup> (R) ; see comm. there and note (p. 203 f.). In v.<sup>b</sup> the same thing is repeated in common phrase, and as I do, so shall you do. These words are not improbably editorial ; beside the detailed instructions in the following verse they are superfluous, and v.<sup>18a</sup> would connect much better with the preceding if they were away : When I reach the outskirts of the camp, 18 and blow a blast on the horn, . . . then you also shall blow, &c.] the Midianites, hearing the charge sounded on different sides of the camp, would be bewildered by the expectation of a simultaneous attack from several quarters. — And say, For Yahweh and Gideon] introduced by the editor from the other narrative (v.<sup>20</sup>) ; observe the colourless, say, for shout.

19. The beginning of the middle watch] the night was divided into three watches ; the first watch, the middle watch, and the morning watch (1 S. 11<sup>11</sup>). The division into four watches (Matt. 14<sup>25</sup> Mk. 6<sup>48</sup>) was adopted from the Romans ; see note. — They had but just posted the guards] Jer. 51<sup>12</sup> cf. 6<sup>17</sup>. More precise note of time ; it was immediately after the turn of the watch, not far from eleven o'clock. It is not intimated that this was a relief guard ; the Midianites may not have thought it necessary to keep guard during the evening. In v.<sup>18c</sup> Gideon was able unobserved to approach near enough to the camp to hear their talk.† — And blew the trumpets, and smashed the jars which they had in their hands] the juxtaposition of the two clauses corresponds to v.<sup>20</sup> ; the second is probably derived in substance from J (Gideon smashed the jar he held ; cf. v.<sup>16aβ</sup>) ; but it has been thoroughly recast by the redactor ; observe the construction, on which see note. — 20. The three companies] as soon as the signal was given, the other two divisions joined their blasts to those of Gideon's own command. — And shattered the jars] the other strand of the narrative (J). — And held on to the torches] the text adds, with their left hands, and with their right, the horns to blow. This is obviously harmonistic; it is a question, however, whether the editor added it all of his own conception, or whether he only altered an older text. If, for the horns to blow, we should substitute their swords, the words might be thought to be an original part of the narrative.* But the swords play no part in the rout of the Midianites, as the author explicitly tells us (v.<sup>21</sup>, J); the words are therefore better attributed wholly to the redactor. — And cried, For Yahweh and Gideon!] this seems to be the original form of the war cry (cf. v.<sup>18</sup>).† The word Sword! is probably a gloss; cf. v.<sup>14</sup>. The cause of Israelites against foreign foes is Yahweh's cause; and he who smites for Gideon, smites for Yahweh (see introduction to ch. 5; esp. p. 134). It is a historical misapprehension, however, to describe the conflict with the Canaanites (ch. 4. 5) or Midianites (ch. 6–8) as a religious war; and especially to compare it with the wars of Islam. ‡

The middle watch implies that the night was divided into three, not four, parts. On this subject see Berachoth, 3<sup>b</sup>. — אַךְ הָקַם הָקִימוּ restrictive; there had been no time for anything more; cf. Gen. 27<sup>80</sup> יָצָא יַעֲקֹב יָעָקֵב, Jacob had barely gone out; see also Jud. 3<sup>24</sup>. The words are understood by not a few older interpreters to refer to Gideon and his men: they had barely roused the guards (i.e. had reached the furthest outposts of the camp), when they sounded; so 𐤀𐤁𐤁 al. 𐤀𐤁𐤁, Lth., Cler. The construction is more common and freer in the later literature. — 20. בְּלִפְרִים . . . בְּלִפְרִים in the original context probably, held on to, kept, as in v.<sup>8</sup>; in the sense of the editor who added the following clause, grasped. Notice further the change of construction; in the first clause ב, in the second the acc.; להקוע also comes in tardily after all the blowing already done (v.<sup>19</sup> 20<sup>a</sup>). — הָרַב לַיהוָה וְלַגִּדְעֹן not equivalent to a genitive, gladius Domini et Gedeonis (L, Lth., EV., Drus., Cler., Cass., Kitt., al.). הָרַב is rather an exclamatory sentence of one member (Paul, Principien, p. 104), probably psychological predicate (observe the indetermination); cf. Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 147, 3.

21. And they stood where they were] lit. each man in his place; cf. 1 S. 14<sup>9</sup>. They did not rush in, sword in hand, but remained as they were, waving their flaring torches and shouting their war-cry. The rest of the verse presents considerable difficulty, though the meaning is plain enough. The first verb, all the camp ran, is not usual in sense 'run away, flee,' and if so interpreted is an unnecessary anticipation of the following, they fled. The renderings, took to their heels, or ran together, are not sustained by usage. Perhaps, by a slight change in the Hebrew, the text should be emended, all the camp awoke, and they set up a wild cry and fled. The verb then adds an effective touch to the description of the night alarm. — 22. And they blew the three hundred horns] repeated by R, to give the following description of the panic in the camp the same connexion which it originally had in E (after the first words of v.<sup>20</sup>). — Imagining that the Israelites had taken the camp by surprise, and in the madness of fear each thinking his comrade a foeman, they turned their swords against each other, and the panic became complete. — Yahweh set each man's sword against his comrade] cf. 1 S. 14<sup>20</sup> 2 K. 3<sup>23</sup> 2 Chr. 20<sup>23</sup>. — The direction of the flight is not made clearer by the multiplication of names in v.<sup>22b</sup>, in which the fusion of two sources is to be recognized. The sites of the places named are not certainly known. From v.<sup>24</sup> it appears that E represented the Midianites as turning southward through the Jordan valley, in which they are intercepted by the Ephraimites. In J, if our surmise about the scene of the action be correct, they would naturally flee eastward by the main route from Shechem to the other side of the Jordan, which descends into the great Wady Far'ah. From the difference of construction in Hebrew, it is probable that Sererah is not derived from the same source as Beth-shittah.

21. [וירץ כל המחנה ויריעו וינוסו] the verbs must all have the same subject; viz., the Midianites (L, AV., Cler., al.). The Kethib ויניסו represents an interpretation which made Gideon's men the subject of both the last verbs: they shouted the war-cry and put (them) to flight (RV.); not, they (Midianites) tried to save their goods (Jud. 6<sup>11</sup>; Be.)—For וירץ I would emend ויירקן, all the camp awoke; see above.—[ויריעו] shouted in alarm, raised a great cry, Mi. 4<sup>9</sup> Is. 15<sup>4</sup> cf. Hos. 5<sup>8</sup> (L, Ki., Schm., Cler., Be., al.); ⚡ ἐσθμασαν καὶ ἐφύγον, prob. sounded the retreat (Ra., Stud., al.)—22. [ויתקעו שלש מאות השופרות] these words are hard to construe: they blew the three hundred horns, gives undue prominence to the instruments. The three hundred horns sounded (LAVLMO), is against the usage of the verb. Very likely the editor wrote שלש המאות השופרות, the three hundred blew their horns (קטע c. c. acc. as in Jer. 4<sup>6</sup> &c.); this construction might easily give rise to misunderstanding, since throughout the passage the verb is construed with ב. — [ונבכל המחנה ו] accidentally repeated from ברקעו. Such cases are often explained as instances of ו explicative, et quidem; Ew. § 340 b; BDB. s.v.—Of the places here named, Abel-meholah, the birthplace of Elisha (1 K. 19<sup>16</sup>), was, in the system introduced by Solomon, included in a prefecture which extended from Taanach and Megiddo in the Great Plain, by Jezreel and Beth-shean, into the Jordan valley. Euseb. (OS<sup>2</sup>. 227<sup>35</sup> cf. 97<sup>11</sup>) suggests a village, Βηθμαελα, 10 m. S. of Scythopolis; doubtless in the modern Wady Mālīh. This name, however, is given by the warm salt spring in the Wady,* and has nothing to do with Meholah. There is even less ground for Conder's identification of Abel-meholah with the neighbouring 'Ain Helweh (Sweet Spring).† Sererah is commonly supposed to be miswritten for Šeredah (1 K. 11<sup>26</sup>),‡ and the latter to be the same as Šarthan (1 K. 4<sup>12</sup> 7<sup>46</sup>), with which it seems to be identified by the chronicler (2 Chr. 4<sup>17</sup>). Šarthan is to be looked for, not in vicinity of Beth-shean, but near Adam (Jos. 3<sup>16</sup>), i.e. probably the modern ed-Dāmīeh, where the main road has doubtless always crossed the Jordan. This is confirmed by 1 K. 7<sup>46</sup>; the bronze castings for the temple were made in the Jordan district, at the crossing (ford) of Adamah between Succoth and Šarthan (read כמעברת

אֶרְמָה [ה] for the meaningless בִּקְעָה. The Succoth of 1 K. 7<sup>46</sup> is then not 'Ain es-Sāqūt, about 9 m. from Beisān (Rob., BR<sup>2</sup>. iii. 309-312; and many), but is the same place named in Gen. and Jos., east of the Jordan. With this Jud. 8<sup>4-5</sup> admirably agrees; and we shall probably not err in ascribing צָרְחָה Jud. 7<sup>22</sup> to the author of 8<sup>3ff.</sup> (J). As Abel-meholah is named with Šarthan in 1 K. 4<sup>12</sup>, it also may come from J here.\* The identification of Šarthan (צָרְחָה) with Qarn Šarṭabeh (Talm. סַרְטָבָה), the great landmark of the Jordan valley (Van de Velde, Knob., Ke., al.), is not possible (Di.). — Beth-shittah, only here; Shatṭa, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$  E. m. NW. of Beisān and about 6 m. E. of Zer'in (Rob., BR<sup>2</sup>. ii. p. 356) is much too near the supposed scene of the surprise. Tabbath also is unknown. The narrative in v. 24, however, supposes that the places were in the valley of the Jordan, toward the middle of its course.

23-25. The pursuit; death of the chiefs. — Gideon summons other tribes to pursue the retreating foe. At his bidding the Ephraimites pour down from their highlands and intercept the Midianites in their flight down the Jordan valley. The two chiefs are captured and slain. — Verse 23 is an editorial addition; v. 24<sup>25</sup> with 8<sup>1-3</sup> form the close of the narrative of E. — 23. The men of Israel] all the men capable of bearing arms. — Naphtali, Asher, and all Manasseh] the men of these tribes, with Zebulun, had according to 6<sup>35</sup> been raised at the beginning of hostilities, only to be summarily dismissed (7<sup>3-8</sup>). Now, before they could have reached their homes, they are called out again. Even if we set 6<sup>35b</sup> aside as an exaggeration of the redactor, the difficulty in 7<sup>23</sup> is only in part removed. Naphtali and Asher were too remote to be of any use in such a pursuit. All Manasseh was called out and pursued Midian (cf. 3<sup>27f.</sup>), would not be exposed to this objection; but cannot be part of the original text; for, first, it conflicts with 6<sup>35a</sup> 7<sup>3-8</sup>; second, in 8<sup>1</sup>, where Gideon is berated in such a menacing tone by the Ephraimites, it is plain that he has not the whole tribe of Manasseh at his back. The entire verse is therefore the addition of a redactor. The form of the verse, with the anteposition of the object, And messengers he sent, is exactly the same as in 6<sup>35</sup>. — 24. Gideon sends messengers through the Highlands of Ephraim, bidding the tribesmen hasten down into the Jordan valley and cut off the retreat of the Midianites by holding against them some of the streams which they must pass. — Seize the water-courses against them, as far as Beth-barah] cf. 3<sup>27f.</sup> 12<sup>5f.</sup>. The watercourses (lit. waters; cf. waters of Megiddo, §<sup>19</sup>) are not the fords of the Jordan (3<sup>28</sup> 12<sup>5</sup>), but a stream emptying into the Jordan. The site of Beth-barah is unknown; in an attempt to fix the position of the stream we have to be guided by general considerations: first, it must have been large enough, when held by an enemy, effectively to stop the Midianites in their flight; second, it must be far enough south to give the Ephraimites time to get there before the Midianites. These conditions are best met by the Wady Fār'ah, a perennial stream, which in the spring is impassable at its mouth,* as are also the adjacent fords of the Jordan (Dāmīeh). In the tongue of land between W. Fār'ah and the Jordan the Midianites would be in a cul de sac, where, in their disorder, destruction was inevitable. Finally, the road leading down this Wady from the highlands in a SE. direction would be the most advantageous line for the Ephraimites in their movement to intercept the foe. We may, therefore, with some confidence locate the scene of v. 24<sup>f.</sup> near the mouth of the stream which comes from Wady Fār'ah.† — As far as Beth-barah] the site is unknown.‡ — And the Jordan] that is, hold the Jordan also against them. It may perhaps be suspected that the words have been added here and in v. b, from 3<sup>28</sup> 12<sup>5</sup>. § — 25. The leaders are taken and slain. — They killed Oreb at Oreb's Rock and Zeeb at Zeeb's Press] the names of these places commemorated the fate of the chiefs. It has been thought that Is. 10<sup>26</sup> (the slaughter of Midian at Oreb's Rock) follows a different tradition, in which Oreb's Rock, which in Jud. 7<sup>25</sup> is only mentioned incidentally, was the scene of the principal encounter and the overthrow of Midian. || But, in so far as the representation of Is. 10<sup>26</sup> differs from that of Jud., it may be explained as the result of a very natural interpretation of the latter. The victory over Midian is alluded to also in Is. 9<sup>4</sup> Ps. 83<sup>9-12</sup>. It is worthy of notice that Oreb and Zeeb are both animal names, Raven and Wolf.* — And pursued Midian] on the text, see crit. note. This pursuit comes too late after the capture and death of the chiefs; the clause also interrupts the connexion between the account of the death of Oreb and Zeeb and the bringing of their heads to Gideon. The words are no doubt part of the attempt to harmonize 7<sup>23</sup>-8<sup>3</sup> with 8<sup>4ff.</sup> The redactor's representation is that the main body of the Midianites escaped across the Jordan; the Ephraimites, bearing their trophies, followed them over, and there fell in with Gideon. — On the other side of the Jordan] harmonistic addition of the redactor.† The author of 7<sup>24ff.</sup>, on the contrary, represented Gideon as following the Midianites in hot pursuit down the valley, driving them into the arms of the Ephraimites, who bring the heads of the chiefs to him as he approaches the scene of the slaughter.

* The text of 1 K. 4<sup>12</sup> is in disorder, "all Beth-shean which is beside Šarthan below Jezreel" is obviously corrupt. No O.T. author could have felt it necessary to describe in such a way the situation of Beth-shean.

The premise of Reland's conjecture, viz., that the place is identical with Βηθαβαρα (east of the Jordan), in the Receptus, John 1<sup>28</sup>, is untenable; and with it the chief motive for the theory falls. ⚡ Βαιθηβαρα (Βαιθηβαρα AB al. is transcriptional error) ⚡ would rather suggest בְּאֵרָה, cf. Wellhausen regards the latter as a purely secondary development of a motive borrowed from 8<sup>1-3</sup>; * Kittel is of the opposite opinion, viz., that 8<sup>1-3</sup> is an imitation of 12<sup>1-7</sup>.† The identity between the two stories does not, however, extend beyond the beginning; the sequel is as different as can be imagined, and in each is in entire conformity with the situation. That the Ephraimites, in the pride of their pre-eminence as members of the leading tribe in Israel, should resent being left out and so deprived of their share of glory and of spoil, and should vehemently assail a leader who had dared to succeed without their counsel and aid, seems so natural a thing that we can without difficulty believe that it happened more than once, or was the subject of more than one tale. —

1. What trick is this thou hast played us, not to call us] cf. 12<sup>1</sup>. The great tribe is jealous of its natural hegemony, and angry that it should seem to be ignored; see above. — They quarrelled with him violently] very likely with such threats as are uttered in 12<sup>1</sup>.

— 2. Gideon placates their anger by magnifying their achievement, and speaking of his own part as an insignificant one. The skill with which his answer is turned reminds us strongly of 6<sup>31</sup>, which our analysis would assign to the same author. — What have I done now to compare with you?] now; after all. — Is not the gleanings of Ephraim better than the vintage of Abiezer] an apt and striking figure. The Ephraimites had indeed not been called into action until after Gideon and his followers had gained the first success over the enemy, but a far greater success had been reserved for them in the slaughter of the invaders and the capture of their chiefs. In contrast with the tribe of Ephraim, and in congruity with the metaphor, Gideon does not name himself, but his clan, Abiezer. — 3. The meaning of the figure. — God has given] the name may perhaps be some indication of authorship; but, as in many instances, the tradition is not consentaneous. — What have I been able to do, to compare with you?] the pride of the great tribe ought to be fully satisfied by the event; God has thrown into their hands the chiefs of Midian. He himself had only beaten up the game which they had killed. — Their anger

4-27. The pursuit beyond the Jordan. — Gideon, with his three hundred men, follows the Midianites across the Jordan. The men of Succoth and Penuel refuse him food for his hungry band; with threats of vengeance, he presses on (v.<sup>4-9</sup>). He surprises the camp and takes prisoners the two kings (v.<sup>10-12</sup>). Returning in triumph, he inflicts condign punishment on Succoth and Penuel (v.<sup>13-17</sup>), and slays the captive kings to avenge the death of his brothers (v.<sup>18-21</sup>). He declines the offer of the kingdom (v.<sup>22f.</sup>). Of a part of the gold taken among the spoils he makes an image (ephōd) which he sets up at Ophrah (v.<sup>24-27</sup>).

The unity of this part of the story is obvious and unquestioned. The only exception is v.<sup>22f.</sup>, in which the 'men of Israel' offer Gideon the kingdom and he declines from theocratic motives. These verses certainly do not belong to the narrative of J; see comm. in loc. In the enumeration of the spoils (v.<sup>26</sup>) some exaggeration by later editors or scribes may be suspected. On the relation of 8<sup>4ff.</sup> to 6<sup>1</sup>-8<sup>3</sup>, see above, p. 176 f.; and on the connexion with ch. 9, see introduction to that chapter. — 4. Gideon came to the Jordan] if our analysis be correct, this is a continuation of J's narrative. In 7<sup>22</sup> he has told us that the Midianites fled to Šeredah, probably near the principal crossing of the Jordan between the vicinity of Shechem and the opposite region of Gilead. The Bedawin on their camels (8<sup>21.26</sup> cf. 6<sup>5</sup>) easily outstripped the pursuit and made their escape across the river. The answer of the men of Succoth shows that they believed the raiders to be already far out of reach; the surprise of the camp shows that the Midianites imagined themselves to be so. — Crossing over, he and the three hundred men] the participial construction is an unusual one; the ordinary expression would be, and crossed over. Perhaps the word is a gloss; see note. — The three hundred men are evidently a constant feature in the different versions of the story; cf. 7<sup>6-8</sup>. — Exhausted and pursuing] cf. 4<sup>21</sup>. The ancient translators found the order of the words unnatural, and tried various shifts with them. — 5. Succoth] evidently lay east of the Jordan, not very far from the ford; Jos. 13<sup>37</sup> (cf. Ps. 60<sup>6</sup>) locates it in the valley; Gen. 33<sup>17</sup> (cf. 32<sup>30.31</sup>) brings it into connexion with Penue!l, as in our passage; both are in the vicinity of the Jabbok (Nahr ez-Zerqā)*. The sites have not been recovered. In the Jerusalem Talmud, Succoth is identified with Darāla, the modern Tell Deir 'Alla just north of the Zerqā; but it is very doubtful whether this is any more than an inference of Jewish scholars from the passages in the Old Testament which are cited above.† A place north of the Jabbok would be out of the line of Gideon's pursuit, if the other topographical notices of our story have been rightly interpreted. The connexion in Gen. also favours a site south of the Jabbok.‡ — Loaves of bread] round flat cakes; 1 S. 10<sup>3</sup>. — To the men who are at my feet] 4<sup>10</sup>. — Zebah and Zalmunna, the kings of Midian] cf. word means rather officials; here, the men who stood at the head of the council of elders; see on v.<sup>14</sup>. The disposition of the tribes east of the Jordan to pursue their separate interests, unconcerned by what befell their kinsmen across the river, is made a reproach to them in the Ode of Deborah; see on 5<sup>17</sup>. It is not improbable, moreover, that in Succoth and Penuel, as in Shechem (ch. 9), the native population predominated. It is hardly necessary to seek a motive for the refusal in the fear of reprisals by the Midianites.* They add to denial, derision.—Are Zebah and Zalmunna already in thy power, that we should give thy soldiers bread?] Gideon was on a bootless errand; the Midianites were already far away, and if he and his little company should come up with them, it would only be the worse for him. Why should they help him on in this wild expedition?—7. He answers their jeer with a threat. When he returns victorious, he will requite their conduct as it deserves; cf. v.<sup>15</sup>.—I will thresh your flesh with thorns of the desert and thistles] cf. v.<sup>16</sup>. With, not of instrument, but of accompaniment, together with. He will throw them naked into a bed of thorns and trample them together, like grain on the threshing-floor.† This is the only natural interpretation of the words, but it does not seem to agree with v.<sup>16</sup>, and the text is perhaps glossed; see note. Palestine has a great variety of thorny plants and shrubs, many of which are formidably armed. The meaning threshing-sledges, frequently attributed in modern dictionaries and commentaries to the word translated above, thistles, is a figment of bad etymology.

4. עֲבָרָא this use of the circumstantial ptcp. is anomalous (though cf. Nu. 16<sup>27</sup>).‡ We expect וַיַּעֲבֹר; and the text is either to be so emended (cf. GLS<sup>2</sup>); or, more probably, עָבַר ('ābar) was originally a marginal gloss, which, when transferred to the text, was forced into construction by pronouncing 'ōber.—5. בְּתֵי נִמְרִין Jer. Shebiith, ix. 2 (fol. 38<sup>d</sup>) identifies the places named in Jos. 13<sup>27</sup> in order from south to north: Beth-nimrah, בֵּית נִמְרִין (now Tell Nimrin); Succoth, סֻכּוֹת (later edd. תְּרַעֲלָה; modern Deir 'Alla); Zaphon, § צָפוֹן (Ἀμαθούς Fl. TS על, S ע); so Drus., Cler., Stud. The preposition את is not instrumental, I will beat you with thorns (Ki., Abarb., al. mu.). Others take את as nota accusativi (Schm.); recent interpreters who adopt this view construe the verb with two accusatives (Ew. § 234 e; Be., Ke., al.), I will make the thorns thresh your flesh. None of these constructions is satisfactory. The first, which alone is grammatically unimpeachable, is hardly the natural expression, and does not seem to accord with v.<sup>16</sup>. It is possible that the words את קוצי המרבר ואת הברקנים are a gloss borrowed from v.<sup>16</sup>, and that the original text in v.<sup>7</sup> was merely ורשתי את בשרכם. — קוצים is the most general word in the O.T. for thorn-bushes. — הברקנים] GLM Σ τριβόλοι 'Α τραγάκανθαι L tribuli, so also S α, Abulw., Ra., Ki., Abarb., and all older Christian interpreters. Pflanzennamen*, p. 429. This is entirely suitable in the context; a teasel or knapweed would be admirably suited to Gideon's purpose; see on v.<sup>16</sup>. ‡ The meaning threshing-sledges was invented by J. D. Michaelis (Orient. Bibliothek, vii. 1774, p. 17). The steps by which this result is obtained are these: ברק ('lightning') might be applied to fire-stones; fire-stones might be set in the bottom of the threshing-sledge; the whole implement might be called from these stones, ברקן (or ברקני, Ges.): ergo ברקנים are threshing-sledges. § Michaelis' theory was taken up by Gesenius in his Lex. (1810), || and has since maintained its place in commentaries and lexicons (Ges. Thes., MV., SS., Ew., Reuss, al.). It is rightly rejected by Stud., Be<sup>2</sup>, Ke., Wetzstein (Zeitschr. f. Ethnologie, v. 1873, p. 285), Löw (Pflanzennamen, p. 356). Stud. rightly observed that את is entirely irreconcilable with this theory.

it appears to have been on the Jabbok, at the point where the road from the north crossed the stream. It was evidently a position of importance, for one of the first acts of Jeroboam I. was to fortify Shechem and Penuel (1 K. 12<sup>25</sup>). The name (Face of God) was perhaps originally given to some projecting rock in whose contour a face was seen; compare the promontory Ἐοῦ πρόσωπον on the coast near Tripolis.* It has not been identified; Merrill would put it at Tulūl ed-Dahab. — He made the same request at Penuel as at Succoth, and got the same answer. — 9. When I return successful, I will pull down this tower] the stronghold of the town, which was itself probably unwalled; cf. v. 17 9<sup>47. 51f.</sup>. Numerous remains of such towers (of course of later date) are found east of the Jordan.† — 10. Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor] the place is otherwise unknown; Carcaria, one day's journey from Petra, with which Eusebius identifies it, is much too remote. On the topography in general see on v. 11. — Their force was with them] the clans which had taken part in the foray had not yet dispersed. The latter part of the verse is obviously inserted by the redactor to harmonize 8<sup>10a</sup> with 7<sup>23ff.</sup>. The fifteen thousand men whom the kings still had with them were the pitiful remnant of the host with which they invaded Palestine; a hundred and twenty thousand fighting men had perished. The enormous figures remind us of ch. 19-21 (cf. e.g. 20<sup>2</sup>), and especially of Nu. 31, the destruction of Midian in the days of Moses. The original narrative may have given the numbers of the Midianite host which Gideon with his three hundred put to flight, but in the connexion it is not unnatural to suspect that the figures (15,000) have been raised. — 11. Gideon went up by the road . . . , east of Nobah and Jogbehah] the words omitted in the translation are generally interpreted, the road of the dwellers in tents, i.e., of the Bedawin. So all the ancient versions; cf. especially ℣: The way to the camp of the Arabs who were encamped in tents in the desert east of Nobah. But the Hebrew text does not admit of any grammatical interpretation; probably the name of a place originally stood here. Jogbehah is named in Nu. 32<sup>35</sup> among the cities built, or fortified, by Gad.* It is now generally identified with Khirbet el-Gubeihāt, NW. of 'Ammān and about midway between that place and es-Salt.† The site agrees sufficiently well with the scanty indicia of our narrative. The general course of the flight from the fords of the Jordan was then south-east, toward the great desert. Nobah occurs in Nu. 32<sup>42</sup>, where we read that a clan Nobah (from the context a branch of Machir) conquered Kenath and its dependencies, and gave the place its own name. Kenath is commonly supposed to be el-Qanawāt in the Hauran;‡ but this cannot be meant here. It has been suggested that the Nobah in our text was the earlier seat of the clan, from which it migrated to the north, to Kenath;§ but the identification of the latter with Qanawāt is rather to be given up. || The Midianites, imagining that they are safe from pursuit, allow themselves to be surprised.—12. The two kings flee, but are pursued and taken.—He threw all the camp into a panic] the panic of the Midianites seems to come too late, after the flight and pursuit of the kings. Scharfenberg conjectured, he devoted all the camp, utterly destroyed it (see on 1<sup>17</sup>). It is not necessary, however, to touch the text. The capture of Zebah and Zalmunna is the point in which the interest of the narration centres; the rest in their fright fled in all directions, leaving the kings to their fate; cf. 2 S. 17<sup>2</sup>, and with the verb, Ez. 30<sup>9</sup>.¶

8. פְּנוֹאל Merrill (East of the Jordan, p. 390-392) thinks that Penuel was at Tulūl ed-Dahab, conical hills, crowned by old ruins, which rise from the middle of the Jabbok valley to a height of 250 feet. The stream, with a sharp bend, winds between them. — With the name Penuel compare פְּנֵל in Carthaginian inscriptions to פְּנֵל בַּעַל, in which Halévy and E. Meyer are very probably right in seeing, not a mystical epithet, "Tnt, face of Baal," but the name of a place; cf. promunturium quod Saturni vocatur, Plin., n. h., iii. 19. — 10. בִּקְרָקֶר [a similar name (Qarqaru) is found in inscriptions of Salmanassar and Sargon; apparently a place in the vicinity of Hamath (Schrader, KAT<sup>2</sup>, p. 180). In v.<sup>11</sup> פְּנֵל puts the camp at 'Aro'er (see on 11<sup>33</sup>). * — נַחֲמֶשֶׁת עֶשֶׂר אֱלָף with the irregular construction of the numeral cf. 2 S. 19<sup>18</sup> Jud. 20<sup>25</sup>, Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 97, 2 n. — בְּנֵי קָרַם in a wider sense than in 6<sup>3</sup>.<sup>33</sup>, to include all the Bedawin. — הַנִּמְלִים the slain; 20<sup>46</sup> Jos. 8<sup>25</sup> Jer. 6<sup>15</sup> 8<sup>12</sup> &c. — שְׁלַף חֶרֶב] excludes non-combatants; the phrase 20<sup>2</sup>. 15. 17. 35. 46 2 S. 24<sup>9</sup> &c. The resemblances in this part of the verse to ch. 20 are to be noted. — 11. הַשְּׂכָנִי בְּאֹהֶלִים commonly rendered, those who are lodged in tents, i.e., the Bedawin, and explained, the road which they ordinarily took in crossing the country, perhaps a trail which avoided the larger towns. This interpretation is more ingenious than convincing. The construct state before a preposition is not infrequent (Philippi, Status constructus, p. 57; Ew. § 289 b; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 130, 1); but the article before the construct is foreign to the whole genius of the Semitic languages, and is not rendered less objectionable by reference to other instances of the same error (Ps. 113<sup>5</sup>. 6 123<sup>1</sup>; cf. Philippi, p. 40 f.; Ol. on Ps. 113<sup>5</sup>). The pass. ptc. is also a stumbling-block, not so much in itself (see Kō., i. p. 176 f.), as because the act. ptc. of this verb is usual in this sense and construction. Finally, בְּרֶךְ with a gen. is elsewhere always the way to, or by, a place; not that used by such and such persons; † the road leading to the Bedawin camps, would be suitable here, but cannot be extracted from the text. — יָגוּהָה רַמְחָא פְּנֵל by etymological combination. — הַמִּתְנַחֵם הָיָה בְּנֶחֱם is predicative, not adv. accus. of state (Be.). — 12. הַחֲרִיר so versions (exc. <sup>AL</sup>). Scharfenberg conj. הַחֲרִירִים; ‡ Schleusner הַחֲרִירִים. If an emendation is necessary, הַחֲרִיר (Ex. 23<sup>23</sup> Ps. 83<sup>6</sup>) would perhaps be preferable to either; cf. ἡ ἑξέρρηψεν. he returned to Succoth by a different road from that which he had taken in the pursuit, and so took the town by surprise.* In our ignorance of the topography, we may hesitate to pronounce decidedly against this explanation; but we cannot have much confidence in it. The text is not intact, and it is doubtful whether the slight emendation which this interpretation requires is sufficient to restore it. — 14. He caught a boy from Succoth and by questioning got from him a list of the principal men of the place. — He wrote down for him the officials of Succoth and its elders] in v.<sup>6</sup> only the officials (sarīm) are mentioned; in v.<sup>16</sup> only the elders (zēqenīm). The latter are the heads of the families or septs which were settled in the town; all the functions of government, so far as they existed in such a state of society, were in the hands of the council of elders.† The word sar, on the other hand, designates an officer, official, especially one appointed by the government; cf. 9<sup>30</sup>, the commandant of the city, &c. Here also it may perhaps mean military officers, the leaders of the men of Succoth in war; cf. the chiefs (sarīm) of Midian, 7<sup>25</sup> 8<sup>3</sup>. — Seventy-seven men] one of those round numbers that are hardly meant to be taken arithmetically. In early times the number of elders in a city was naturally determined by the number of families that were able to establish their right to be represented in the council. — 15. With this description of the men who were to be held responsible for the affront he had received, Gideon came to Succoth. The place does not seem to have offered any resistance; it was probably not walled. — Here are Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom you taunted me] v.<sup>6</sup>. He had kept his prisoners alive in order to show them thus to the citizens of Succoth and Penuel. — To thine exhausted men] the adjective which Gideon himself uses in v.<sup>5</sup> is effectively put in the mouth of the men of Succoth to aggravate their churlishness. — 16. He carries out his threat (v.<sup>7</sup>). — He took the elders of the town and thorns of the desert and thistles, and threshed with them the men of Succoth] for threshed ~~It~~ has, taught; cf. 1 S. 14<sup>12</sup>. None of the versions, however, seem to have read so, and the correspondence to v.<sup>7</sup> is otherwise so close that we should expect the same verb which is used there.

The form of torture intended is probably one to which there are numerous references in Greek authors, and which has survived to modern times under the name of cariling. Thus Croesus is said to have put to death a partisan of his brother: ἐπὶ κνάφον ἑλκων διέφθειρε; * and in Plato's Inferno the very worst offenders, such as the tyrant Ardiaeus, are tortured in this way; † see note. — Budde suspects that the words, the elders of the town and, are a gloss. — 17. Gideon carries out his threat by destroying the tower of Penuel, and slays the inhabitants of the place. — It would be hazardous to infer, from the fact that the chastisement of Succoth precedes that of Penuel, that the author represented Gideon as returning by a different road from that which he followed in the pursuit; it would be not unnatural for him to relate the fulfilment of Gideon's threats in the order in which they were made (v.<sup>5-8</sup>), without reflecting that on his way back he would come to Penuel first.

Besides Moses' Midianite father-in-law, it occurs as the name of the Ishmaelite father of Amasa (1 K. 2<sup>5</sup> cf. 2 Chr. 2<sup>17</sup> 2 S. 17<sup>25</sup>); also of families of Judah (1 Chr. 2<sup>32</sup> 4<sup>17</sup>) and Asher (1 Chr. 7<sup>38</sup>), and, with slight variation of form, of an Edomite clan (Gen. 36<sup>26</sup>). Commentators have felt some difficulty in explaining how this boy came to be among the picked three hundred (7<sup>1-8</sup>). In reality 8<sup>4ff</sup> is not connected with ch. 7, but belongs to the older and simpler version in which Gideon's followers were his clansmen of Abiezer (6<sup>34</sup>); Jether's presence in the expedition, therefore, need occasion no surprise. It is more than likely, moreover, that Gideon led his prisoners home in triumph, and that they were put to death at Ophrah, near the place where the murder had been committed.† The boy had not the heart to draw his sword. — 21. With true Arab spirit the captives challenge Gideon to give the death-stroke with his own hand. — Slay us thyself, for a man has a man's strength] lit. as the man, so is his strength. An immature boy is not to be expected to do what requires a man's arm and a man's heart. Kimchi and others conceive the meaning to be that Jether could not dispatch them outright, but would hack and mangle them in his weak and clumsy efforts to kill.‡ — Gideon kills them and takes their spoil. — The crescents which were on the necks of their camels] necklaces or collars (v.<sup>26</sup>), the elements

22, 23. Gideon declines the kingdom.—The Israelites offer to make Gideon and his descendants hereditary rulers; he refuses out of religious scruple. This does not agree with the representation of J in the preceding narrative, in which Gideon and his clansmen of Abiezer act for themselves and by themselves: the men of Israel appear on the scene quite unexpectedly; * we must imagine them convoked for the express purpose.† The refusal, v.<sup>23</sup>, is at variance also with ch. 9, from which we see that Jerubbaal had, at least in the vicinity of Shechem, an authority which would in natural course devolve to his sons.‡ If v.<sup>22, 23</sup> belong to either of the two sources which we have tried to separate in ch. 6-9, it must be to E, in which the tribes of Manasseh and Ephraim, and perhaps others, take part in the campaign. For this origin of the verses we may also adduce 1 S. 8<sup>7</sup> 10<sup>19</sup> 12<sup>12</sup> (E), in which the same condemnation of the kingdom, as conflicting with the sovereignty of Yahweh, is expressed in very similar terms. § A later writer (D) || would have no visible motive for introducing the offer and rejection of the kingdom in this place. If E is the author of the verses, they must have stood in his narrative after 8<sup>1-3</sup>; the editor who combined 7<sup>23</sup>-8<sup>3</sup> with 8<sup>4-21</sup> (Rje) would be constrained to transpose them to their present place. To this hypothesis it may be objected, that the author who represented the Ephraimites as meeting the victor in such a truculent mood (8<sup>1-3</sup>) can hardly have conceived of their turning around and offering to make him king. If 8<sup>1-3</sup> are genuine, as I have tried to show, the only answer would be that 8<sup>22, 23</sup> belong to a secondary stratum in E (E<sub>2</sub>), to which we might then perhaps ascribe 7<sup>23</sup> also. This, again, would have the support of the corresponding passages in Samuel, which are commonly attributed to E<sub>2</sub>.—22. *The men of Israel] the body of freemen who formed the army; cf. 7<sup>14</sup> 9<sup>55</sup>. What tribes the author meant to represent as taking part in this assembly can hardly be determined; Manasseh and Ephraim pretty certainly, possibly also the others named in 7<sup>23</sup>.—Rule over us] 9<sup>2</sup>; cf. reign in Jotham's fable (9<sup>8, 10, 12, 14</sup>).

* In 7<sup>14</sup> in the mouth of the Midianite the phrase has a different connotation.

We should hardly attribute any significance to the fact that the latter word is not used here; * what they offer him and his descendants is in fact a kingdom, differing by the hereditary principle from the purely personal authority of the Judge (shōphet). — Because thou hast delivered us] cf. 10<sup>18</sup> 11<sup>8,9</sup>. To deliver his people in war is the very calling of a king; 1 S. 9<sup>16</sup> Is. 33<sup>22</sup> &c. — 23. I will not rule over you, nor shall my son rule over you; Yahweh shall rule over you] cf. 1 S. 12<sup>12, 17, 19</sup> 8<sup>7</sup> 10<sup>19</sup> Hos. 13<sup>10f</sup> 9<sup>9</sup> 10<sup>9</sup>. The condemnation of the kingdom as in principle irreconcilable with the sovereignty of Yahweh, the divine king, appears to date from the last age of the kingdom of Israel, those terrible years of despotism, revolution, and anarchy which intervened between the death of Jeroboam II. and the fall of Samaria, when history seemed to write large the words of Yahweh by a prophet of the time: Thou saidst give me a king and princes; I give thee a king in my anger and take him away in my fury.† It first appears in Hosea and in the Ephraimite historians of his time or a little later (E<sub>2</sub>). ‡

(cf. also Kue., Kitt.) surmise that in the original narrative the kingdom was not only offered, but accepted; a later editor corrected this in a theocratic spirit (v.<sup>23</sup>). — 23. On the gods as kings in Semitic religions, see W. R. Smith, Religion of the Semites, p. 66 ff. The sovereignty of Yahweh was, of course, universally recognized in old Israel (cf. eg. Jud. 5); the whole development of the religion presupposes this principle. But it is one thing to acknowledge Yahweh as the divine king, as Isaiah, for example, does, § and quite a different thing to conclude that he cannot endure the existence of a human king in Israel. This is by no means a necessary theological inference; it must have had a definite historical reason such as the experience of Israel in the 8th century afforded.

(ephōd) which he sets up at Ophrah. The Israelites worship it; and it becomes a cause of evil to Gideon and his family. — The making of the ephōd which stood in the holy place at Ophrah may very well have been narrated in J; it was a famous trophy of the great victory over Midian. The latter part of v.<sup>27</sup>, which makes it a cause of apostasy to Israel and of ruin to the house of Gideon, expresses a very different feeling toward it; both the thought and the language betray a later writer (cf. 2<sup>17</sup>, 2<sup>3</sup>). Verse<sup>24-27a</sup> are ascribed by Kuenen, Budde, and others to the older narrative, which spoke of the ephōd without a suspicion of disapproval.* The verses are, however, closely connected with v.<sup>22f</sup>, and in this connexion, as well as in the additions to v.<sup>26</sup>, the hand of the editor must be recognized. — 24. Let me make a request of you] the words connect very naturally with v.<sup>22f</sup>; he declines the kingdom which in their gratitude for deliverance they offer him, but asks of them the golden ornaments they have stripped from the slain. If v.<sup>22f</sup> are rightly ascribed to a different author from v.<sup>24-27a</sup>,† the beginning of v.<sup>24</sup> must have been harmonized by the editor who combined them (Rje). In J the request could only be addressed to Gideon's followers, the Abiezrites. — Every man give me the ring of his spoil] ear-rings are probably meant; nose-rings appear in the O.T. only as women's adornments. — They wore gold rings, for they were Ishmaelites] Ishmaelite seems to be used here not of the race, but of the mode of life, Bedawin. In the genealogical systems, the Midianites belong to a different branch of the Abrahamidae from the Ishmaelites; see on 6<sup>1</sup>. We are to infer that such ornaments were not worn by the settled tribes.‡ The half-verse is perhaps a gloss. — 25. They willingly accede to his request; a mantle is spread on the ground, and the rings they had stripped from the slain are thrown into it. The mantle (simlah) was a wide outer garment or wrapper. It could readily be converted into a sack by bringing the corners together and tying them; cf. Ex. 12<sup>34</sup> Prov. 30<sup>4</sup>. — 26. The weight of the gold rings amounted to seventeen hundred shekels, not far from seventy pounds. The figures are not excessively large, even if they represent the spoil of Gideon's three hundred men; a single ring might often weigh half a shekel (cf. Gen. 24<sup>22</sup>). — Not including the crescents, and the pendants, and the purple garments worn by the kings of Midian] cf. v.<sup>21</sup>. The half-verse is an editorial exaggeration such as we have noted in a number of other places. This catalogue of things which were not used in making the ephōd is quite superfluous, and only interrupts the narrative.* — Crescents and pendants] coupled in the same way in Is. 3<sup>18f</sup>, the only other place where the latter word occurs. The translation pendants (? ear-drops) is suggested by the etymology; just what kind of jewelry is meant cannot be certainly known; on the crescents, see on v.<sup>21</sup>. — The purple garments worn by the kings of Midian] the spoils of the kings naturally fell to the leader of the expedition (v.<sup>21</sup>). Purple robes are the badge of royalty; but would J imagine the Bedawin chiefs riding to a foray in their robes of state? — The necklaces that were on the necks of their camels] v.<sup>21</sup>. Budde sees in these words the only genuine part of v.<sup>26b</sup>, and regards v.<sup>21bβ</sup> as a gloss, explaining in an unnecessary way how Gideon got these crescents.† Wellhausen and Stade, on the contrary, rightly hold v.<sup>21</sup> to be genuine, and the whole of v.<sup>26b</sup> secondary; observe the substitution of the general necklaces for the rare and characteristic crescents. The author of v.<sup>26b</sup> wished to enumerate all that fell to Gideon in the distribution, as well as what was given him at his request by the people, regardless of the inappropriateness of the inventory in this place. — 27. Gideon made it into an ephōd] the ephōd was made of the gold rings of the Midianites (v.<sup>25. 26a</sup>); ‡ v.<sup>26b</sup> is obviously a gloss; see above. Ephōd is the specific name of a kind of idol; cf. 17<sup>5</sup> 18<sup>14</sup> &c. Hos. 3<sup>4</sup>.§ This appears here from the material, and the quantity of it employed, as well as from the verb, place. That it was so understood by the editor is evident from his comment, all Israel went whoring after it, his standing expression for heathenish or idolatrous worship. The ephōd seems to have been peculiarly

That the making and setting up of the idol at Ophrah is related before his return home, might perhaps be explained by supposing that the writer wished to finish at once telling what was done with the spoils of the Midianites; but v.<sup>28</sup> brings the story of Gideon to a formal close, v.<sup>29</sup> cannot stand after it. Budde conjectures that v.<sup>29</sup> originally stood after 8<sup>3</sup>, being the conclusion of the first of the two stories of the rout of Midian; from this place it was necessarily removed when 8<sup>4ff</sup>. was combined with 7<sup>24</sup>–8<sup>3</sup>. This hypothesis would also better explain the intimate connexion which now exists between v.<sup>22f.</sup> and v.<sup>24-27</sup>.

30-35.† Verses<sup>30-35</sup> belong to the Deuteronomic framework of the book; thought and expression correspond to those of D in 2<sup>12ff.</sup> 3<sup>7</sup> (see below). What these verses contain in addition to the author's pragmatic formulas; viz., that the Israelites adopted the worship of the Shechemite Baal-berith (v.<sup>33b</sup>), and their ungrateful treatment of Jerubbaal's family (v.<sup>35</sup>), is derived from ch. 9. These notices are inserted not as an introduction to ch. 9, ‡ but as a substitute for it. § Ch. 9, as will appear below, was not included by D in his Book of Judges. The story of Abimelech and the Shechemites did not naturally fall into his scheme of apostasy, oppression, and deliverance; its moral was of a different kind. He therefore omitted it, only taking the worship of Baal-berith as an instance of the chronic lapse into heathenism, and summing up the rest in v.<sup>35</sup>, as a proof of Israel's ingratitude to their defender, matching their forgetfulness of the divine deliverer.

Verses<sup>30-32</sup>, on the contrary, form an introduction to the story of Abimelech; some such preparation is presupposed in 9<sup>1</sup>, where Abimelech first appears upon the scene. In their present form, however, these verses can hardly be attributed to the author of

ch. 9; more than one phrase in them suggests rather a writer familiar with the Priestly narrative in Genesis.* There is no trace of a Deuteronomic hand. In view of these facts, the hypothesis of Budde is the most acceptable which has been proposed. It is that the final editor (Rp) restored ch. 9, which Rd had omitted, prefixing to it this introduction (v.<sup>30-32</sup>), the substance of which he derived from the pre-deuteronomic source in which he found the story of Abimelech. To this source probably belonged also the notice of the burial of Jerubbaal; cf. 2<sup>9</sup>. — 30. Now Gideon had seventy sons] the number, 9<sup>2. 5. 18. 24. 56</sup>; cf. IX. Abimelech and the men of Shechem.—Abimelech, the half-Canaanite son of Jerubbaal, persuades the people of Shechem to have him for their ruler in preference to the other sons of his father. Abetted by them, he kills his brothers,—Jotham, the youngest, alone escaping the slaughter,—and is made king in Shechem (v.<sup>1-6</sup>). Jotham in a fable vents his contemptuous opinion of their new lord, upbraids them for their base ingratitude to Jerubbaal their defender, pronounces a curse upon them and their king, and flees (v.<sup>7-21</sup>). After three years the Shechemites fall out with Abimelech; an insurrection is fomented by one Gaal, a new-comer (v.<sup>22-29</sup>). Abimelech, apprised of the situation by the governor of the city, comes with his soldiers; Gaal goes out to fight with him; is beaten and driven back into the city, only to be cast out by the governor (v.<sup>30-41</sup>). In a second day's fighting, Abimelech takes the place by stratagem, puts the inhabitants to the sword, and destroys the city (v.<sup>42-45</sup>). The people of the neighbouring Tower of Shechem take refuge in the temple of El-berith; Abimelech burns it over their heads (v.<sup>46-49</sup>). While besieging Thebez, Abimelech is fatally hurt by a millstone which a woman threw from the wall, and dies by the sword of his armour-bearer. So Jotham's curse is fulfilled (v.<sup>50-57</sup>).

The character of the narrative as a whole displays a striking affinity to 8<sup>4-21</sup>; of the pragmatism which pervades large parts of ch. 6. 7 there is no trace.* We should be inclined, therefore, in conformity to our analysis of the preceding chapters, to ascribe it to J.† Budde, on the contrary, derives it from E, who, in retelling the old folk-story, introduced of his own invention the fable of Jotham (v.<sup>7-21</sup>).‡

The unity of the chapter has hitherto been almost unquestioned. It is, however, not unquestionable. There are clearly two accounts of the origin of hostilities between Abimelech and the Shechemites. In v.<sup>22-25</sup> an evil spirit sent by God stirs up the Shechemites; their armed bands rob all who pass through their territory: in v.<sup>26-29</sup> a family of new-comers, headed by Gaal, incite a revolt by appeals to race-pride and hatred. The sequel of the first of these accounts is found in v.<sup>42-45</sup>; Abimelech lays an ambush against the city, takes and destroys it: that of the second is v.<sup>30-41</sup>. We obtain thus two complete narratives, and the confused repetitions of the story as it now stands disappear. The fable of Jotham (v.<sup>7-21</sup>) is cognate to the first of these two narratives, and carries with it its premises in v.<sup>1-6</sup>; from this source v.<sup>50f.</sup> also is derived. If our observation is correct, the version of the story in which Gaal plays the leading part may be ascribed to J; the other to E.

No traces of D's hand are discoverable in the chapter. The story of Gideon is concluded in the usual way in 8<sup>28</sup>; the introduction to the story of Jephthah, 10<sup>6ff.</sup>, follows. We must infer from the absence of D's characteristic setting that the history of Abimelech and the Shechemites was not included in the Deuteronomic Book of Judges, into whose pragmatism it could not easily be coerced.* It was found, however, in the older Jehovistic book which D worked over; the same sources run through it which we have discovered in ch. 6-8; and that it lay before D appears from 8<sup>33-35</sup>, which is his brief substitute for it. It must have been restored by a still later editor, who wrote 8<sup>30-32</sup> to introduce it.†

An analysis of ch. 9 is attempted by Winckler (Allorientalische Forschungen, p. 59 ff.), as follows: J 9<sup>1-5, 21, 26-29, 41, 42, 43, 46-49</sup>; E 9<sup>6</sup> [7-20] 21 * 23-25, 30-33, 34-35 [v.<sup>36-38</sup> R?] 39, 40, 44, 45. To which of the two v.<sup>50-54</sup> belong is uncertain; v.<sup>22, 55-57</sup> are added by D.

The story of Abimelech is one of the oldest in the Book of Judges, and in various ways one of the most instructive. We have learned from ch. 1 that the Israelites in no part of the land completely dispossessed the native population; that, on the contrary, the latter, even where the new-comers were strongest, retained many of the most important places. Ch. 9 gives us a glimpse of the relations between the two peoples thus brought side by side. The Canaanite town, Shechem, ‡ subject to Jerubbaal of Ophrah;

his half-Canaanite son Abimelech, who naturally belongs to his mother's people (see on v.<sup>1</sup>); the successful appeal to blood, 'which is thicker than water,' by which he becomes king of Shechem, ruling also over the neighbouring Israelites; the inter-loper Gaal and his kinsmen, who settle in Shechem and instigate insurrection against Abimelech by skilfully appealing to the pride of the Shechemite aristocracy, — all help us better than anything else in the book to realize the situation in this period.

Many scholars see in the story a kind of prelude to the history of the kingdom of Saul. Gideon, it is said, was in fact king in Ophrah, whatever we think of 8<sup>22f.</sup>; * that his sons would succeed him is a matter of course (9<sup>2</sup>); Abimelech is formally created king (9<sup>6</sup>), and reigns over Israelites (Joseph) as well as Canaanites; a short-lived Manassite kingdom thus preceded the Benjamite kingdom of Saul. All this shows that Israel was feeling its way toward a stronger and more stable form of government.† There seems to me to be some exaggeration in this. It is a very uncertain, and in my opinion improbable, conjecture that 8<sup>22, 23</sup> supersede an older statement that Gideon was made king in consequence of his victory over Midian, as Saul after the relief of Jabesh Gilead.‡ That Shechem had been subject or tributary to him, and had reason to expect that his sons would maintain their authority over the city, does not prove that he was in fact king in Manasseh and Ephraim; that his authority descended not to one son, but to all of them jointly, implies quite the opposite. Abimelech is king of Shechem, a Canaanite town, in which, as among the Canaanites generally, the city-kingdom was the customary form of government. That he was also recognized as king by purely Israelite towns or clans is not intimated, and is not a necessary inference from the fact that he has the Israelites at his back in his effort to suppress the revolt of the Canaanite cities (9<sup>55</sup>).

The moral of the story is brought out strongly, but naturally. Abimelech and the people of Shechem enjoy but a little while the fruits of their common crime; then they fall out, and become fatal to each other. Abimelech destroys Shechem, but loses his life before Thebez, which had apparently conspired with Shechem in the revolt. This righteous retribution is denounced beforehand by Jotham, and the writer closes by pointing out how signally his prophetic curse had been fulfilled. Studer remarks that we have here a religious conception of history very similar to that of the Greeks in the time of Herodotus and the contemporary tragic poets, "who would have found in the fate of Gideon's house, if it had belonged to their national cycle, fruitful material for their magnificent compositions."

1-6. Abimelech is made king of Shechem. — Abimelech persuades the people of Shechem, his mother's town, to support him. With money from their temple treasure he hires a band of bravos and murders his brothers. He is formally made king of Shechem and Beth-millo. — 1. Abimelech the son of Jerubbaal went to Shechem after his father's death (8<sup>32</sup>). Jerubbaal throughout the chapter; see on 6<sup>32</sup> 7<sup>1</sup>. — To his mother's brethren the nearer kinsmen; cf. 14<sup>3</sup> 16<sup>31</sup>. — The whole clan of his mother's family the clan to which it belonged. Shechem, the modern Nābulus,* lay in a valley between Mt. Ebal on the north and Mt. Gerizim on the south, in the heart of Mt. Ephraim. The neighbourhood of the city is well-watered and exceedingly fruitful. The principal road from Central Palestine across the Jordan to Gilead started from Shechem (Gen. 32 33); the continuation of this road westward led down to the seaboard plain. The great north road from Jerusalem through Bethel also passed through Shechem, continuing north by En-gannim (Genin) into the Great Plain, or striking off NE. to Beth-shean. It had thus every advantage of position, and was doubtless even in pre-Israelite times a prosperous and important place. It is mentioned more than once in the patriarchal story (Gen. 12<sup>6</sup> 33<sup>18</sup> 34 35<sup>4</sup> 37<sup>12ff.</sup>). The treacherous attack on Shechem by Simeon and Levi (Gen. 34 49<sup>5-7</sup>) must have been among the earliest attempts of Israelites to establish themselves west of the Jordan. It resulted, in the end, most disastrously for the two tribes, which never recovered from the vengeance which the Canaanites took upon them. At Shechem was the ancestral tomb of Joseph (Jos. 24<sup>32</sup>); there according to Jos. 24<sup>1, 25</sup>,* Joshua assembled Israel to receive his parting instructions and make the solemn covenant of religion; cf. Dt. 11<sup>29</sup>. In Shechem, also, the chief place of Ephraim, the assembled tribes made Jeroboam ben Nebat king (1 K. 12); one of the first acts of his reign was to fortify the place.† — 2. He puts his kinsmen up to speak for him to the citizens. — The freemen of Shechem] v.<sup>3</sup> 20<sup>5</sup> 1 S. 23<sup>11, 12</sup> 2 S. 21<sup>12</sup>; lit., the proprietors, those to whom it belonged, the citizens; then, perhaps, without distinction of citizen and metic, the inhabitants. — Which is the better for you, that seventy men rule over you — all the sons of Jerubbaal — or that one man rule over you?] the authority of Jerubbaal, he intimates, would descend to his sons jointly, not to one designated successor. If this representation is true, it is evident that we cannot think of Jerubbaal as the founder of a kingdom, however short-lived; for in that case the succession must have been his first care. Nor need we suppose that the people of Shechem recognized any right to rule in Jerubbaal or his sons; they would succeed to his power, that is all. The evils of such a many-headed tyranny needed no argument; the earliest political experience of men taught the lesson: οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίῃ· εἰς κοίρανος ἔστω, εἰς βασιλεύς. Wellhausen thinks that the monarchy is here regarded as an advance upon the patriarchal rule of the nobles, and infers that the story was not written till after the establishment of the kingdom in Israel. I do not think we need see in Abimelech's words deep reflections on the advantages of different forms of government, behind which must lie the experience of the monarchy. The present case was plain enough in itself. — Remember, besides, that I am your own flesh and blood] lit. your bone and your flesh; 2 S. 5<sup>1</sup> 19<sup>12, 13</sup>; ‡ cf. Under the holy tree at Shechem Jacob concealed the idols and amulets of his household (Gen. 35<sup>4</sup>); under it, too, Joshua set up the witness-stone, which had “heard all the words which Yahweh spoke” (Jos. 24<sup>26f.</sup>, E). || From the latter passage it appears that in the eighth century there was an old standing-stone (massebah) under the holy tree. The word massebah, which in later times was an offence, was mutilated by an editor or scribe; see critical note.

1. Jos. 24 (E) assumes that at the end of Joshua's life Shechem was in the possession of the Israelites; Gen. 48<sup>22</sup> Jos. 24<sup>32</sup> give different accounts of the Israelite title to the place. That in the days of Abimelech it was still Canaanite appears beyond question from the following story. At a Beth-millo (query, in Jerusalem?) Joash was murdered (2 K. 12<sup>21</sup>). Following Ṭ מליות (= Heb. מלילה Is. 37<sup>33</sup>, cf. Ra.) and the context in 1 K. 11<sup>27</sup>, the word is commonly interpreted 'fill' (of earth), earth-work (Ges. Thes.), more specifically, an outwork covering the entrance to a city or fortress (SS., cf. Sta., GVI. i. p. 343). These etymological explanations are uncertain; the word is apparently Canaanite. We have no clue to the site; the place must have been near Shechem.—עם אלון מצב] Ṭ points קצב as ptcp. Hoph. (Gen. 28<sup>12</sup>), a tree set up (cf. Σ ἄ), which is perilously near nonsense. Context and construction require the designation of a particular tree; in place of מצב we should have a genitive with the article. Ṭ GALV al. g * πρὸς τῇ βαλάνῳ τῆς στάσεως pronounced קצב [ה] (Jos. 4<sup>3</sup> cf. 1 S. 13<sup>23</sup>); cf. Ἄ ἐπὶ πεδίῳ στηλώματος Ṭ עם מישר קצבא. In the light of Jos. 24<sup>26f</sup>. we need have no hesitation in emending קצבא Ṭ אלון המצבא. That קצב is a noun of the same meaning as מצבא (Stud., SS., al.) is a much more hazardous conjecture; the article is indispensable, and the noun-type קצב inexplicable. In other places the מצבא has been rendered harmless by substitution of מוכה (Gen. 33<sup>20</sup>); cf. Gen. 31<sup>49</sup> (מצפה, cf. v.<sup>45</sup>) and Σ a here μασφγᾶ.

7-21. Jotham's apologue.—Jotham is apprised of the proceedings, and, from a safe position on Mt. Gerizim, shouts in the ears of the assembly his fable of the trees who made them a king, giving it a pointed application to the Shechemites and their new lord. The application is not on all fours with the fable. The proper lesson of the fable is, that the good and useful members of the community have too much to do in their own station and calling to leave it for the onerous responsibilities of the kingdom; it is only the idle and worthless who can be persuaded to take the office. It is natural to see in the former part of the fable a reference to Jerubbaal, who declined the kingdom which the unworthy Abimelech had just assumed;* but if this contrast was in the writer's mind, he does not bring it out more distinctly in the sequel, which is exclusively occupied with Abimelech. The most striking incongruity is in the very point of the application. In v.<sup>15</sup> the question is, whether the trees are acting in good faith toward the box-thorn in making him king; in v.<sup>16</sup>, whether in making Abimelech king the Shechemites have acted in faith and honour toward Jerubbaal and his house.†

From this discrepancy it has been inferred that the fable (v.<sup>8-15</sup>) was not original with the author of v.<sup>7-21</sup>, but was borrowed by him, perhaps from a collection of popular apologues, and put to a use quite foreign to its native purport.‡ It is somewhat hazardous, however, to draw this conclusion from the premises. Faith and honour are indeed used with a different reference in v.<sup>16</sup> from that which they implicitly have in v.<sup>15</sup>; the application is logically defective. But such looseness of connexion is not altogether uncommon in the moral of apologues; the parables of the New Testament would furnish more than one example.§ While we concede the possibility, therefore, that the author has here drawn upon the stores of folk-wisdom, rather than on his own invention, this supposition is by no means necessary; and it remains the simpler and more natural hypothesis that the fable is of the same conception with the rest of the speech. If this be the case, it is very doubtful whether we should see in the fable a judgment upon the kingdom as a form of government, such as a number of recent critics are disposed to find in it.|| The author had in mind a concrete instance, beyond which he had no occasion to travel. The attempt to determine the age of the fable by its attitude to the kingdom is therefore very precarious.*

Jotham's speech is hardly to be deemed historical; † it is the way in which the author sets forth, at the appropriate moment, the true nature of the new kingdom, and foretells what will come of it (cf. v. <sup>56f.</sup>). It is noteworthy, however, that these words are uttered, not, as in so many similar cases, by a nameless prophet, or by an angel, but by the man from whose lips they come with the most dramatic fitness. In this also we may perhaps see evidence of the antiquity of the whole story. ‡ — With the apologue, cf. especially 2 K. 14<sup>9</sup>.

7. People told Jotham] that the citizens of Shechem were making Abimelech king. The author apparently represents Jotham as addressing the multitudes assembled at the holy tree to acclaim the king (v. <sup>6</sup>). The words lose much of their point if we imagine that, after Abimelech had again left Shechem, Jotham himself called the people of the town together on Mt. Gerizim and delivered to them his speech. § — He stood on the top of Mt. Gerizim] Mt. Gerizim is on the southern side of the valley in which Shechem lies, Mt. Ebal on the northern; see above, on v. <sup>1</sup>. || From the summit of Gerizim, more than nine hundred feet high, a man could hardly make himself heard by people in the valley below; ¶ but the writer's language need not be pressed to this absurdity. Modern travellers have remarked a projecting crag on the side of the mountain, which forms a triangular platform overlooking the town and the whole valley, a natural pulpit admirably suited to the requirements of the story.** — Listen to me, ye freemen of Shechem, and may God listen to you †] may God give ear to your prayers as you give ear to me.

in later times, it was poured on the ground by the altar ; * probably in the primitive practise it was poured out before or at the foot of the standing stone. The wine which the god thus partakes of with his worshippers has the same effect on him as on them.

The teaching of this part of the fable is that men whose character and ability fit them to rule are unwilling to sacrifice their usefulness and the honour they enjoy in a private station, for the sake of power. By the repetition of the offer and refusal, the author generalizes ; no man of standing in the community would want to be king.† The general assertion may, however, be made for a particular application, and does not necessarily convey a judgement upon the kingdom in principle. Whether we find in it such a judgement will depend on our opinion about the origin of the fable ; see above, p. 245. However that may be, the older interpreters were doubtless right in seeing in the fable in its present connexion a contrast between Gideon's refusal (8<sup>22f.</sup>) and Abimelech's ready acceptance of regal name and power.‡ — 14. Their proffer of the kingdom being rejected by all the better sort, the trees come down to the common box-thorn, a plant of very opposite character from those which they had previously addressed ; bearing no fruit, giving no shade, yielding no timber ; a useless and noxious cumberer of the ground. — 15. Here at last they found one who was ready to be their king. — If you are anointing me king over you in good faith] if it be not jest and mockery, but serious earnest. — Come, take refuge in my shadow] put yourselves under my protection and confide in me. The irony of the fable has its climax in the seriousness of this pledge of protection : the image of the trees of forest and field seeking shelter in the shadow of the thorn-bush has in it the whole absurdity of the situation. Men wanted a king to defend them from their enemies (8<sup>22f.</sup> 1 S. 9<sup>16</sup>) ; of what use was a king who could not do that? — But if not, fire shall go forth from the box-thorn and devour the cedars of Lebanon] it was doubtless not an uncommon thing for a fire, starting among thorns, to spread to field and orchard (Ex. 22<sup>6</sup>), or forest (Is. 9<sup>18</sup>), so that the lowly thorn became the destruction of the stateliest trees. The cedars of Lebanon represent the opposite extreme of creation from the thorn; see 2 K. 14<sup>9</sup>, Jehoash's insulting answer to Amaziah of Judah. Where there is no power to help, there may be infinite possibilities of harm. Those who made the thorn king over them put themselves in this dilemma: if they were true to him, they enjoyed his protection, which was a mockery; if they were false to him, he would be their ruin.*

The punctuation is entirely anomalous, and has given rise to much discussion; see Stud., and Kō., i. p. 240-242.† The most probable explanation is that the punctuation intends a Hoph. with ה interrogative, assuming the elision of the ה preformative; shall I be compelled to give up, &c. (Ol. § 89; Sta. § 175 a; Kō., i. p. 242). What the author intended is another question. It seems at first sight simplest to take the verb as Kal with ה interrogative (הָחֵרְלִיתִי); ‡ but הָחֵרְלִי is never construed with acc. (poetical instances where the object is an inf., such as Job 3<sup>17</sup>, are not in point). I prefer, therefore, to regard it as Hiph. (הָחֵרְלִיתִי), 'cause to leave off, stop.' § That the Hiph. does not elsewhere occur is of no great weight. The absence of the interrogative particle is no objection; see the following note. The idiomatic use of the perfect in these exclamatory questions is to be noted; cf. Gen. 18<sup>12</sup> 1 S. 25<sup>11</sup> (וְלִקְחָתִי), Dr.<sup>8</sup>. § 19. It seems to be akin to the use of the perfect in hypotheses contrary to reality. || The interrogative particle is not usual in such cases. — [יְשֵׁנִי, pinguis oliva, Verg., georg. ii. 424; Hor., epod. ii. 54 f.; cf. The corresponding Syriac word ܡܬܐܩ is defined in the native lexicons as ‘must, fresh grape juice as it comes from the press’; see PS. 1635. 16–20. The application.—16. And now] to come to the moral.—If you have acted in good faith and honour in making Abimelech king as you have done] the words correspond to v.<sup>15</sup> (in good faith), but are used with a different reference, as immediately appears. In v.<sup>15</sup> the question is of their good faith to the new king; in v.<sup>16–20</sup> of good faith to Jerubbaal and his family. If it is thought too improbable a hypothesis that the author invented an apologue that does not in strict logic tally with the application he intended to make of it, the alternative is to suppose that he borrowed and adapted an older fable, the lesson of which was not quite the same that he wished to inculcate.† This explanation, however, creates other difficulties; for v.<sup>15b</sup> is obviously not a natural ending for an independent fable of the purport generally attributed to v.<sup>8–15</sup>; it is appropriate, and we might almost say intelligible, only as foreshadowing the ruin which Abimelech brought upon the Shechemites. Moreover, in the following narrative itself it is the unfaithfulness of the men of Shechem to * Several older commentators whose exegetical tact was stronger than their grammar, translate פ in the same way; so Vatabl., Drus., Celsius, al.

Abimelech that is the cause of their undoing, however justly this may be regarded as a retribution for their unfaithfulness to Jerubbaal. The simplest and most 'natural' explanation seems to be that in pointing his moral the author's logic is not strictly consequent. — And if you have dealt well with Jerubbaal] the triple protasis in v.<sup>16</sup> is separated from its apodosis (v.<sup>19b</sup>) by a parenthetic review of Jerubbaal's deserts and the sins of the Shechemites (v.<sup>17f.</sup>); v.<sup>19a</sup> repeats the substance of v.<sup>16</sup> to resume the interrupted construction. In the nature of the case, v.<sup>17f.</sup> are not organically related to the context, and could be omitted without leaving a gap. I see no sufficient reason, however, for regarding them as an interpolation; they have a vigour and an individuality of expression which are not usually found in glosses.* — If you have done to him as he deserved] lit. according to the desert of his hands; cf. Is. 3<sup>11</sup>. — 17. To give emphasis to the last words, he reminds them of Jerubbaal's services, and of the way in which they have been requited. — In that my father fought for you] with deepening feeling, my father, instead of Jerubbaal as before. — And hazarded his life] lit. cast his life straight away, as a thing of which he recked not; cf. 5<sup>18</sup>.† — And rescued you] it is to be noted that the writer thinks of the people of Shechem as Israelites, at variance with v.<sup>26ff.</sup> — 18. Whereas you have risen against my father's house and have slain his sons] this was their return for the dangers he had incurred and the deliverance he had wrought for them. The Shechemites had with full cognizance furnished Abimelech the means to kill his brothers (v.<sup>24</sup>), and shared his guilt in the crime by which they jointly profited (cf. v.<sup>2</sup>). — Seventy men on one stone] the words are here somewhat superfluous, and may be borrowed from v.<sup>5</sup>. — The son of his maid-servant] slave-concubine. In 8<sup>31</sup> Abimelech's mother is Gideon's concubine, apparently a free woman; see comm. there. The difference of representation probably existed in the sources. — Because he is your brother] kinsman, fellow-countryman; v.<sup>2.3</sup>. — * Doorn. thinks that v.<sup>16b-19a</sup> is all a gloss. Smend, who adopts this opinion, recognizes that the verses are at least a correct exposition of the author's meaning (Alttest. Religionsgesch., p. 66 n.).

† The phrase, cast behind one, is commoner (1 K. 14<sup>9</sup> &c.). Cler. cites Lucan, iv. 516: Projeci vitam, comites, &c.

19. If, I say, you have acted in good faith] resuming the protasis (v.<sup>16</sup>) after the digression, v.<sup>17c</sup>. — Rejoice in Abimelech and may he rejoice in you] I wish you all joy in one another<sup>e</sup> in your new relation. The words have an ironical ring; much happiness may you have in this bramble-king of yours. — 20. But if not, fire shall go forth from Abimelech] the figure of the fable, v.<sup>15b</sup>. — And fire shall go forth from the freemen of Shechem, &c.] here he goes beyond the fable; not only shall their unworthy king be fatal to them, but they to him. With this parting curse he left them; its fulfilment is declared in v.<sup>56f</sup>, cf. v.<sup>42-49, 50-54</sup>. — 21. Jotham made his escape to Beer, beyond the reach of Abimelech's vengeance. The site of Beer is unknown. S. Schmid and Studer are of the opinion that Beersheba, in the remote south, is meant. Others think that it is the same as Beeroth (Jos. 9<sup>17</sup> 2 S. 4<sup>2</sup>), now el-Bireh, three hours north of Jerusalem.* The name (Well) is too common to make this identification anything more than a possibility.

21. בִּיאָרָה Euseb. (OS<sup>2</sup>. 238<sub>7a</sub>) identifies Beer with a village of the name (Βηρα) 8 m. N. of Eleutheropolis; probably the modern Khirbet el-Bireh, W. of 'Ain Shems (Beth-shemesh); so Ke.† Maundrell (1697) and Reland (Palaestina, p. 617 f.) regarded el-Bireh north of Jerusalem as the Beer of our text. Eshtori Parchi (fol. 68<sup>b</sup>) identified this Bireh with Beeroth, and since Robinson (BR<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 452) this has been the prevailing opinion.‡ Many, as has been said above, believe Beer and Beeroth to be the same place, and put them both at el-Bireh. Beeroth belonged to the Gibeonite confederacy, and was doubtless at this time a Canaanite town (2 S. 21<sup>1</sup>, cf. 4<sup>2</sup>).

22-25. The Shechemites and Abimelech fall out. — God sends a spirit of discord between Abimelech and the people of Shechem, in just retribution for their common crime. The Shechemites lie in wait in the mountains and rob passers by. — The verses form the introduction to one of the two accounts of Abimelech's attack on Shechem (v.<sup>42-45</sup>), and are parallel to v.<sup>26-33</sup>. This version may with considerable confidence be ascribed to E; observe elohim, v.<sup>23</sup>, and compare the reflections of v.<sup>24</sup> with Jotham's speech, v.<sup>16-18</sup>, and v.<sup>56f</sup>. — 22. Abimelech ruled over Israel three years] in the foregoing narrative we have heard only how Abimelech was made king of Shechem and Beth-millo (v.<sup>6, 18, 20</sup>). In what follows it appears that he did not reside at Shechem, and he lost his life in trying to put down the revolt of Thebez. It is evident, therefore, that his power extended over other cities in Central Palestine; that it included Israelites as well as Canaanites appears from v.<sup>55</sup>; but the statement that he ruled over Israel is not borne out by the rest of the chapter, and is strikingly at variance with v.<sup>23-25</sup>, which speaks only of Shechem.* There is therefore good reason to suspect that this chronological note is not an original part of the story, but an editorial addition. — 23. God sent an evil spirit] a mischief-making spirit; compare the madness of Saul, 1 S. 16<sup>14</sup> 18<sup>10</sup> (the evil spirit of God) 19<sup>9</sup>, and the delusion of Ahab's prophets, 1 K. 22<sup>19-23</sup>. God is the author of the fatal mistakes and misdeeds of men, which they commit to their own undoing; he sends a spirit of infatuation into them to impel them blindly to their ruin. This belief corresponds very closely to the Greek idea of ἄρνη, even in the personification of this spirit (1 K. 22<sup>21-23</sup>).† — The men of Shechem were false to Abimelech] cf. v.<sup>15, 16a</sup>. — 24. God sent this spirit to foment mischief between them, in order that, in fitting retribution, these partners in crime might inflict upon each other the just punishment of their deed; cf. v.<sup>56f</sup>, v.<sup>4, 18</sup>. Some disorder has been introduced into the text, apparently in the attempt to render it more explicit, or more emphatic; see critical note. — 25. Put men in ambush on the hill tops to his damage, and robbed all who passed by them on the road] the position of Shechem, on two of the main arteries of trade and travel through Mt. Ephraim,‡ made this particularly serious; cf. Hos. 6<sup>9</sup>. In what way Abimelech was a sufferer by this above others, we are not told. He may himself have levied toll on those who passed through his district, in which case his revenues would fall off in the insecurity of the roads; and doubtless those who were about his business, or who were bearing tribute to him (cf. 3<sup>16</sup>), would be especially welcome objects of plunder to the Shechemites. — It was told to Abimelech] the words have no connexion with the following story of Gaal's intrigue (v.<sup>26-29</sup>), but are parallel to v.<sup>30-33</sup>, and would naturally be followed by the statement that Abimelech with his soldiers marched against Shechem. We probably have the continuation of this narrative in v.<sup>42ff.</sup>; see there.

22. וַיִּשָּׁר pointed by  $\text{מ}$  as if derived from שור (like ויטר &c.), cf. וַיִּשָּׁרוּ Hos. 8<sup>4</sup>; in Is. 32<sup>1</sup> as from שרר. The latter is preferable; see K<sup>8</sup>, i. p. 328, 352; and note above on ויור 6<sup>88</sup>. — 24. . . . ודמם לשום על לבוא חמס . . . [אביסלך] the change of subject between the two inf. (that the murder . . . might come, and that he might put the guilt of their blood on Abimelech) is intolerably harsh.  $\text{G}$  straightens out the construction by rendering τοῦ ἐπαγαγεῖν, but there is no reason to think that they read להביא. Probably לשום was introduced by an ancient scribe who missed the government of רמס. The resulting awkwardness of structure reminds us of 3<sup>2</sup>. — [חמס שבעים בני ירבעל] objective genitive, as usual with this noun; the crime committed against them, cf. 26-41. Gaal incites the people of Shechem to revolt; they are defeated by Abimelech. — Gaal, a new-comer in the place, persuades the Shechemites to throw off Abimelech's yoke, and puts himself at their head (v.<sup>26-29</sup>). He is disconcerted by Abimelech's sudden appearance before the town, but goes out to battle against him (v.<sup>30-39</sup>). The Shechemites are badly beaten, and driven within their walls; Gaal and his clansmen are thrust out (v.<sup>40f.</sup>). The narrative has the realism and the humour which belong to the best Hebrew folk-stories, and in many respects reminds us of the story of Samson. As the other strand in this chapter has in general the features of E, we may at least provisionally ascribe this part of the narrative to J.

26. Gaal ben Ebed and his kinsmen] son of a slave is evidently a perversion of the name, which was probably Obed; see crit. note. Whether these new-comers were Israelites or Canaanites is not clear; see on v.<sup>28</sup>. — And moved into Shechem] so the words should probably be translated. The expression is an unusual one, and hardly says what we should have expected in the context; but the Hebrew text is supported by all the versions. —

The citizens of Shechem put confidence in him] by what arts he insinuated himself into their confidence we may learn from the following verses, in which Gaal appears as a shrewd demagogue. — 27. They celebrated the completion of the vintage, according to custom, by a feast at the temple of their god; see note. Such an occasion could hardly fail to quicken local patriotism, and bring to the surface whatever latent dissatisfaction there was with the rule of their half-Israelite and evidently non-resident king. — They ate and drank, and reviled Abimelech. — 28. Gaal took advantage of this temper to instigate a revolt and offer himself as a leader. Unfortunately, v.<sup>28</sup> is obscure, and the text perhaps not intact. In the connexion the following points seem to be certain: 1. Gaal does not foment an insurrection of Israelite denizens against the rule of the Shechemite Abimelech, but of the native Shechemites against the half-Israelite Abimelech. 2. Of whatever race Gaal may have been, he identifies himself with the men of Shechem and speaks as one of them.* 3. He appeals to their national pride in the people of Hamor father of Shechem, the old blue blood of Canaan against this usurping half-breed. In this sense the verse is understood by Rashi, who gives, upon the whole, the most satisfactory interpretation of פח: "Who is Abimelech, that he should be ruler of Shechem, and who are the Shechemites, that they should be subject to Abimelech? Is not Abimelech the son of Jerubbaal, who was from the Abiezrite Ophrah; † and is not Zebul merely his lieutenant? The master has no rightful authority in the city, and his lieutenant is of no account at all. If you are bent on getting yourselves masters, come and be subject to the men of Hamor, who was anciently the prince of the land; why should we be subject to Abimelech?" The structure of the latter part of the verse is much simplified, however, if instead of the imperative, Serve the men of Hamor, we pronounce the verb as a perfect: Were not the son of Jerubbaal and Zebul his lieutenant (formerly) subjects of the people of Hamor abi-Shechem? Why, then, should we (now) be subject to him? In the first half of the verse the antithesis in the clauses,

† i.e. an Israelitish stranger.

Who is Abimelech? and who is Shechem, that we should serve him? seems to many scholars to be unsatisfactory; they think that we should have a synonymous expression, as in 1 S. 25<sup>10</sup>, "Who is David, and who the son of Jesse?" But in the light of the following, as I understand it, the antithesis is not only tolerable but effective. Is Abimelech king in his own right? Is Shechem naturally his empire, that we should be subject to him? So far from it, he himself was formerly a subject of the old Hamorite nobility of Shechem. I see no necessity, therefore, for any radical change in the text; see critical note. — Hamorabi-Shechem] Gen. 33<sup>10</sup> 34; the old Canaanite aristocracy. — 29. Would that I had the direction of this people; I would get rid of Abimelech!] like a consummate demagogue he first arouses the passions of his hearers, then adroitly puts himself forward as the man for the crisis. — I would say to Abimelech, Enlarge your army and come out!] I would defy him to maintain his authority over Shechem by arms. So 6: 11 has, he said to Abimelech. In view of v. 30<sup>f</sup>, the latter reading cannot be interpreted, he sent this challenge to Abimelech; we could only understand the words as a swaggering apostrophe in his speech to the Shechemites.*

(transposing son of Jerubbaal and son of Shechem).* But, as W. R. Smith rightly urges, בן שכם does not mean a Shechemite; "the expression would not be idiomatic even if the Shechemites as a whole were called בני שכם instead of שכני שכם." Sta. and Bu. therefore return in this particular to ח. Further עבדו was read by ס ἐδούλωσεν αὐτοῦ,† beside which ס<sup>M</sup> has the doublet κατεδουλώσατο τοὺς ἀνδράς Εμμωρ. The latter is adopted by We. (יַעֲבֹדוּ), Oort, ‡ W. R. Smith, Sta., Bu., al. We should then translate: Who is Abimelech and who Shechem, that we should be subject to him? By all means let the son of Jerubbaal and Zebul his lieutenant subject the people of Hamor father of Shechem. But why should we (Israelites) be subject to him? (WRS., Sta.). Kautzsch would emend וְיַעֲבֹדוּ: Is he not the son of Jerubbaal, and Zebul his lieutenant? Well, let him (Zebul) serve him then, together with the Hamorites; § but why should we (Israelites) serve him? Attempts have also been made to relieve the difficulty by transposition: W. R. Smith thinks that v.<sup>28f</sup> ought to follow immediately on v.<sup>22</sup>; against which the objections of Sta. (GVI. i. p. 194 n.) seem conclusive. Bu. thinks that they should stand after v.<sup>25</sup>. These critical operations seem to me all to start from false exegetical premises. It is assumed, originally on the ground of an erroneous explanation of ס's Ιωβηλ = יובל, that Gaal was an Israelite, and that he stirred up the Israelite part of the population to revolt against the rule of the Shechemite king, Abimelech. Thus W. R. Smith: "The whole verse is a Hebrew declaration of revolt against the king of Shechem (9<sup>6</sup>), who for three years has by the aid of his mercenaries tyrannized over Israel (v.<sup>22</sup>). So too in v.<sup>29</sup> הָעַם הַזֶּה is Israel, and Gaal closes with an open challenge to Abimelech to come forth (evidently from Shechem his capital) to meet the Israelites in the field." These assumptions conflict not only with the implications of the narrative, but with its plain words. Gaal gains the confidence of the בְּעַלֵי שָׁכֶם (v.<sup>26</sup>), i.e. of the very people who made Abimelech king (v.<sup>6.20</sup>); it is at their vintage festival, at the temple of their god, that he makes his incendiary speech. W. R. Smith is constrained, therefore, to sever the verses from their context and remove them to a different place. If, however, we follow the guidance of the context, we shall see that Gaal instigates the native Shechemites, with Cler. would give the vb. an indefinite subject, some one told Abimelech; but in the context this is highly improbable. — [כִּי] The origin of this anomalous כִּי is not clear; Ol. § 247 suggests that it may be instead of the כִּי of the lengthened imv. (obs. the foll. צֹאח). This view is adopted by Kō. i. p. 534, but as there is no other instance of this imv. לִיָּהּ, the explanation is doubtful. Some codd. and edd. have כִּי; see JHMich.

30-34. || Only so, We. argues, can we comprehend Abimelech's course after Gaal had been expelled (v.<sup>41</sup>). He did not allow himself to be deceived by Zebul's pretence of loyalty; the latter was the real leader of the revolt, and perished in the fall of the city. So also Kautzsch and Kitt. But if v.<sup>42ff.</sup> is not the sequel of v.<sup>26-41</sup>, but another account of the fate of Shechem from a different source, this argument ceases to have any cogency. See further, on v.<sup>41</sup>.

seems to me to conflict with the language of our verse, and with the following narrative; see on v.<sup>36ff.</sup> 41. Zebul had no force at his command in Shechem; it was not garrisoned like a conquered city; it is difficult to see how a loyal official could have acted differently in the circumstances, or what ground there is for imagining that he was implicated in the treason. Whether he was a Canaanite or an Israelite does not appear.—31. He sent messengers to Abimelech . . . saying] the word omitted in translation is anomalous and probably corrupt; the versions generally render, secretly, or, deceitfully, perfidiously. It would be more to the purpose to have the name of the place where Abimelech made his residence; cf. v.<sup>41</sup>, at Arumah; see note.—Gaal and his kinsmen are coming to Shechem, and are plotting to take the city from thee] the translation of the last words is based on the context; they are rendered by the ancient versions, invest, besiege the city against thee,* which cannot be right. Stir up the city to hostility† would suit the context, but is unsupported.—32, 33. Zebul counsels Abimelech to come by night and conceal his forces in the fields near the city. At sunrise he shall discover himself and advance to the attack. Gaal and his followers will be drawn out of the city to give battle in the open field, and Abimelech will have them in his power.—Thou shalt do to him as the occasion serves] 1 S. 10<sup>7</sup>.—34. Abimelech adopts Zebul's plan; and disposes his men under cover in four divisions; cf. 7<sup>16</sup> and below, v.<sup>43</sup>.

But, 1. תְּרַמֶּה is an unexampled and really inconceivable type of noun (Jos. Kimchi). 2. If תְּרַמֶּה were a synonym of תְּרַמֶּה, the text would not say that Zebul sent secretly to Abimelech (בְּתְרַמֶּה), but that he sent deceitfully or fraudulently, i.e. with intent to deceive him (Stud.). Jos. Kimchi regarded it as the name of a place, identical with אֲרוֹמָה v.<sup>41</sup> (see Ki., comm. in loc.); so RLbG., Abarb., Tremell., Piscator; cf. Reland, p. 585. Some modern scholars think that the same name, probably Arumah, should be read in both places; so Stud., Doorn. The construction with כִּי would then be explained, he sent messengers to A., who was at Arumah (Stud.).—[וְהָיוּ צִירִים אֶת הָעִיר עָלֶיךָ] ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ περιβάλλοντος, APVLMO πολιορκουσι, L oppugnat, T צירין, S obsident; all taking H correctly as ptc. of צור. The construction, however, is irregular; besiege is not צור c. acc., but צור על. The forms of צור and צר I. II. are much confused in the punctuation (see SS. p. 621), but it is impossible to make צרים a transitive derivative of צר, nor, if we should emend צורים, would the only sense supported by usage, 'they treat the city in a hostile manner, attack it,' be satisfactory; 'make hostile, incite to hostility,' is wholly fictitious. Stade (SS. p. 621*) conj. in this sense הָנָם מְצִרִים (Hiph. of צר II.), "falls nicht grössere Verderbnis vorliegt." Possibly the author wrote צרים, 'lay snares for, plot to take'; צר would then be, to thy detriment.—33. פֶּעַשׁ קָל v. 44 20<sup>87</sup> (אֵל) Job 1<sup>17</sup>; of a body of men suddenly emerging from a covered position, and rushing to storm a place or attack an enemy.—34. אֲרַבְעָה רִאשִׁים see on 7<sup>16</sup>.

In the morning Gaal goes out to the gate of the city.* As he stands there, Abimelech and his troops discover themselves.—36. Gaal descries them and exclaims to Zebul, See, there is a body of men coming down from the tops of the hills!] Zebul replies, You see the shadow of the hills as men] his fears make him imagine enemies where there are none; an insinuation of cowardice which is succeeded by downright insult.—37. The enemy comes into clearer view; Gaal makes out the divisions advancing from different directions.—There is a body coming down from near the Navel of the Land, and one division is advancing from the way to the Diviner's Tree] these localities are unknown: the former would seem to be a sacred hill; the latter is a sacred tree, whose name (me'ōnēnīm) indicates that it was, or had been, the seat of a certain species of diviners; cf. the Moreh Tree,† also in the vicinity of Shechem (Gen. 12<sup>6</sup>, cf. Jud. 7<sup>1</sup>), and the Maṣṣebah Tree, above v.<sup>6</sup>. The latter is not identical with the Meonenim Tree of our verse; apart from the difference of names, the Maṣṣebah Tree was in all probability close to the town, which the other, as our verse shows, was not. Whether the Meonenim Tree here is the same as the Moreh Tree of Gen. 12<sup>6</sup>, is uncertain; the names are of somewhat similar, but not the same meaning, and there is no reason why there may not have been three, or a half dozen, well-known sacred trees in the vicinity of Shechem.—38. Zebul's irony now turns to open taunt.—What has become of thy bragging] lit. thy (big) mouth; thy boastful words. — When thou saidst, Who is Abimelech] v.<sup>28</sup>. — Are not these the men for whom thou didst express such contempt? March out, now, and fight with them!] Zebul, by reminding Gaal, doubtless in the presence of many bystanders in that public place, of his former boasts, goads him into fighting. He had indeed no choice; if he declined the challenge, his prestige and influence in Shechem were gone.

* Not, marched out (Kitt.); he did not suspect the presence of the enemy.

† Perhaps an oracle-tree.

39-41. The battle; defeat of the Shechemites. — 39. Gaal put himself at the head of the citizens of Shechem and went forth to battle.* — 40. The Shechemites seem to have made no stand against Abimelech, who chased them to the very gate of the city, with heavy losses. He did not, however, storm the place. — 41. Abimelech abode in Arumah] if this name is to be restored in v.<sup>31</sup> (see comm. there), he returned to his residence, satisfied with the chastisement he had inflicted upon the Shechemites for listening to the seductions of Gaal. Arumah is not otherwise known; on the sole ground of the similarity of the names some scholars identify it with El-'Ormeh, two hours SE. of Shechem.† It has been conjectured that Arumah is the same as Rumah (2 K. 23<sup>36</sup>), but this also is uncertain.‡ — And Zebul expelled Gaal and his kinsmen, so that they should not live in Shechem] lit. from living. We can well imagine that in the smart of defeat the feelings of the Shechemites toward Gaal underwent a sudden revulsion, and that they were not unwilling to see him made a scapegoat; perhaps also thinking that this would suffice to placate Abimelech. The verse manifestly brings the story to an end. Abimelech resides at Arumah; Gaal and his clan are banished from Shechem. As the original close of the account of Gaal's insurrection (J) it is perfectly intelligible and appropriate. But it is just the opposite in its present position. After the withdrawal of Abimelech and the expulsion of Gaal, the fresh attack on Shechem, the discomfiture of its inhabitants by the same stratagem which had been in sight.* On the other hand, all becomes plain, if we see in v.<sup>42</sup> the original sequel of v.<sup>25</sup>: Abimelech learns that bands of Shechemites are infesting the neighbourhood, robbing and plundering on the highways, and takes measures to punish them. The next day, when they set out on such a predatory excursion, he is informed by his scouts, and lays an ambush for them. They, not suspecting the proximity of the enemy, fall into the snare and are cut to pieces. The city, weakened by the absence of a large part of its defenders, falls. Verses <sup>42-45</sup> are therefore to be ascribed to the same source with v.<sup>23-25</sup> (E).—42. On the following day] in the present connexion, the day after their defeat and the expulsion of Gaal; in the original context (E), the day after Abimelech was apprised that they had begun their guerrilla warfare; see above.—The people went out into the country] on an expedition like that described in v.<sup>25</sup>.—43. He concealed his forces in three divisions (<sup>7</sup><sup>16</sup> <sup>9</sup><sup>34</sup>), in the neighbourhood of the city. When the Shechemites came out of the city, and had got to some distance from it, he rose from his ambush and attacked them.—44. More particular account of the execution of his stratagem.—Abimelech and the body which was with him] under his immediate command; cum cuneo suo L. Sowing with salt seems to be a symbol of perpetual desolation; nothing should henceforward thrive there; cf. Dt. 29<sup>23</sup> Jer. 17<sup>6</sup> Ps. 107<sup>34</sup>. There is no other trace in the O.T. of such a custom.‡ If Shechem was really destroyed at this time, it is not to be supposed that it long lay in ruins; its position was too

46-49. Destruction of the Tower of Shechem. — The people of the Tower of Shechem, hearing of the fate of the city, take refuge in the temple of El-berith. Abimelech burns their asylum over their heads, and they perish in the flames. — The verses are apparently a continuation of the preceding narrative of the destruction of Shechem. — 46. When the inhabitants of the Tower of Shechem heard it] what Abimelech had done to the city. The Tower of Shechem (Migdal-Shechem) was not a citadel within the city, like that at Thebez (v.<sup>61</sup>), in which the people took refuge when the city was captured, but an unwallled town in the neighbourhood of Shechem, though not immediately adjacent to it. It owed its name to a tower which stood there, ‡ and was the site of the temple of El-berith. Its inhabitants were Shechemites, who had joined in the insurrection against Abimelech, and now, with good reason, feared his vengeance. As in v.<sup>6.20</sup> the people of Beth-millo join with those of Shechem in making Abimelech king, it has often been thought that the same place is meant here; § but there is no obvious ground for this, while the difference of names is decidedly against it. The situation of the Tower of Shechem is not known; from v.<sup>48a</sup> it may perhaps be inferred that it was, like Shechem itself, in the valley, or on the lower slopes of one of its sides. — They went into the . . . of the temple of El-berith] the meaning of the word passed over in the translation is entirely unknown. Some of the ancient versions render, stronghold,* and many modern scholars think that they find etymological support for the interpretation, tower, citadel. In 1 S. 13<sup>6</sup>, however, the only other passage in which the word occurs, it clearly denotes a hiding-place, not a fort. Others think, therefore, of an artificial cave, or underground chamber; but this also is based on a somewhat remote etymology, and does not altogether suit the requirements of v.<sup>49</sup>. — For El-berith some Greek texts have Baal-berith, as in v.<sup>4</sup>. It is not certain that the same temple is meant. The temple of El-berith at the Tower of Shechem was apparently not immediately adjacent to the city; on the other hand, it is not very probable that there were two temples in the same vicinity dedicated to the same divinity.† The difference of the names signifies little. In early times, they were substantially equivalent, the el (numen) which was worshipped at a place was naturally its ba'al (the divinity of the place). It is also possible that El is here a later substitution for Baal.‡ — 47. Abimelech learns that the people of the Tower of Shechem are all gathered in one place. — 48. He leads his men to a hill hard by, to get wood to set their asylum on fire. — Mt. Zalmon] the situation of this hill is not known.§ To identify it, on the strength of the name, with the southern peak of Gerizim, on which stands the tomb of a Moslem saint, Sheikh Selmān el-Farsī, is an absurdity. — With his axe, Abimelech cut branches of trees, put them upon his shoulder, and bade his men with all speed follow his example. — 49. Every man with his load of brush on his shoulder, they return with Abimelech, pile the wood against the place in which the

Many modern lexx. and comm. interpret, tower, citadel (Ki., RLbG., Cler., Simon., Ges., MV., al.), following Abulwalid, who compares

Arab. صَرْح, † a large, high building, standing apart (TA.). De Dieu referred to the Eth. in the sense of upper story or room; JDMich. in that of temple, thinking of an open court in the interior of the temple, while Stud. understands the vabs itself. Both these explanations are far-fetched; neither really gives us what is wanted here (cf. v. 49), and neither is conceivable in 1 S. 13<sup>6</sup>, where the צָרְיִים are places of concealment (named with caves, holes, cliffs, pits), as all the versions rightly understand. ‡ Ra. refers to older Jewish interpreters who take the word in the sense, underground chambers (volutes); he himself explains it in both places as a stockade (palissades). Modern scholars have compared the Arab. ضريح 'grave, narrow excavation for the body at the bottom of the grave.' § The word occurs also in the Nabataean inscriptions from Teimā, צריה, where it appears to be a grave or sepulchral chamber excavated in the rock (Doughty, Documents épigraphiques, 83.4 = Euting, Nabatäische Inschriften, 153.4; cf. Nöldeke, ib. p. 55). || From this it has been inferred that the Heb. צריה meant an excavation in the earth or rock, perhaps made as a place of refuge. But although this would suit the context in Samuel well enough, it is hardly possible in our passage (cf. v. 49), and the whole etymological construction is very dubious. — Ⲭⲁⲙ Baal ⲉⲛⲁⲑⲁⲕⲁⲥ, P Baal Βερεϑ, L Ηλ ⲉⲛⲁⲑⲁⲕⲁⲥ, Ⲛ fanum dei sui Berith. — 48. הר

Abimelech to power because he was one of themselves; they tried to throw off his yoke when they found that he was, after all, his father's son. Whether the Israelites who formed Abimelech's army were his subjects (v.<sup>22</sup>), or whether they took his side in the conflict against the Shechemites, because he was an Israelite, and Jerubbaal's son, the too brief story does not tell us.

51. מגורל עו in this sense is prob. originally derived from עו = עאן (med. ū), 'take refuge' (cf. מַעֲאֵן 6<sup>26</sup> מַעֲוָה); but it has become confused with עו from עָוָה, see SS. p. 497 a; JDMich., Supplementa, p. 53 ff. — וְכָל בְּעָלֵי הָעִיר cf. 10<sup>10</sup> 20<sup>26</sup>. The examples of this warw explicativum (Ew. § 340 b; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 154 n. b), at least in the older writers in the O.T., are most of them, for one reason or another, dubious. In the present instance it is possible that the conjunction was inserted by a scribe who understood בעלי העיר as ἡ πόλις did, οἱ ἡγεούμενοι τῆς πόλεως, instead of citizens. The author may have written, "All the men and women, — all the citizens of the town" (comprehensive apposition). A more radical conjecture would be that the last words, which are lacking in Ḥ<sup>B</sup>, are an addition by a later hand; it is likely, however, that the omission in Ḥ<sup>B</sup> is accidental; cf. X. 1-5. The Minor Judges: Tola and Jair.*—Tola (v.<sup>1f.</sup>) and Jair (v.<sup>3-5</sup>), with Ibzan, Elon, and Abdon (12<sup>8-15</sup>), form a group of five judges (with whom Shamgar, 3<sup>31</sup>, is often reckoned as the sixth), of whose exploits nothing is related. These judges are introduced in standing formulas entirely different from those which form the setting of the stories of [Othniel], Ehud, Deborah and Barak, Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson, and exhibit no trace of D's distinctive pragmatism. The character of the scheme of the Minor Judges is best exemplified by the notice of Elon (12<sup>11-12</sup>),† which contains absolutely nothing else: "And there judged Israel after him, Elon the Zebulonite; and he judged Israel ten years. And Elon the Zebulonite died, and was buried in Aijalon in the land of Zebulun." The notices of Tola and Jair differ from this pattern only in the opening words, "There arose after him." Besides the name and origin of the judge, the years of his rule, and the place of his burial, we have in the case of three of them (Jair, Ibzan, and Abdon) the number of their sons, sons and daughters, sons and grandsons; evidence that they were persons of rank and consequence. The names of Tola, Jair, and Elon occur elsewhere in the genealogical systems. Tola is a son of Issachar (Gen. 46<sup>13</sup> Nu. 26<sup>23</sup>), that is, a clan (Nu. l.c.), and, as may be inferred from 1 Chr. 7<sup>1ff.</sup>, the leading clan, of that tribe; Puah, here his father, appears in the lists as his brother, that is, another clan of Issachar. Elon is a son (clan) of Zebulun (Gen. 46<sup>14</sup> Nu. 26<sup>26</sup>); and the name of his burial place, though differently pronounced by JA, is doubtless the same, the chief seat of the clan. Jair is a son of Manasseh (Nu. 32<sup>41</sup> Dt. 3<sup>14</sup> 1 K. 4<sup>13</sup>); in another place (1 Chr. 2<sup>21-23</sup>), a great grandson of Judah on his father's side, and of Machir ben Manasseh on his mother's. The identity of the Jair named in all these places with the judge in our text is proved by the constant association with the Havoth-jair (villages of Jair) in Gilead; see on v.<sup>4</sup>. The names of Ibzan and Abdon do not occur elsewhere, but the mention of their numerous posterity has naturally the same significance as in the case of Jair; they are extensive clans with numerous branches and alliances. Their prosperity and dignity are symbolized by the fact that their sons and grandsons rode upon asses. In the case of all five of these Minor Judges, therefore, we probably have, not the names of individuals, but of clans.* The chronological scheme of the Minor Judges also differs from that of the others. Elsewhere we find uniformly, first, the duration of the oppression; second, the duration of the period of security under the judge; there is an interregnum between each judge and the next. In the case of the Minor Judges, on the contrary, we have only the number of years each judged Israel, and there is no intimation of an interval between them; the formula, And after him, implies, rather, that the writer meant to represent their rule as consecutive. The first of these ways of reckoning corresponds to D's whole construction of the history as a rhythmical succession of apostasy, with consequent oppression and deliverance, and the chronological data appear imbedded in his formulas; the second does not accord with this theory. Moreover, the seventy years assigned to the Minor Judges appear to be independent of the systematic chronology of the book, and to disturb its symmetry. It has been inferred from this that the Minor Judges were introduced into the book by a hand later than the Deuteronomic author (D).† The question is one of considerable difficulty; it can be advantageously discussed only in connexion with the problems of the chronology and composition of the book in general; see Introduction, §§ 4, 6, 7.

* This does not exclude the possibility that individuals may have borne these names (cf. above on 3<sup>12ff.</sup>, p. 91); but for the author of the notices in the Book of Judges the individual is clearly lost in the clan.

† So We., Sta., Bu., Co. Against this inference see Kue., HCO<sup>2</sup>, p. 342; Kitt.

Of the source from which these notices are derived we can affirm nothing.

1. Tola. — There arose after Abimelech to deliver Israel] according to Budde's not improbable hypothesis, the same hand (the last editor) restored ch. 9, which D had omitted,* and introduced the Minor Judges. — To deliver Israel was the mission of the judge; see on 2<sup>16</sup> 3<sup>10</sup>. From what foes, or by what deeds, he delivered Israel, is not narrated. — Tola the son of Puah] both are names of clans of Issachar; see above, p. 270. — Son of Dodo] the name Dodo (var., Dodai) occurs twice in the list of David's heroes, 2 S. 23<sup>9</sup> 1 Chr. 11<sup>12</sup> 27<sup>4</sup> and 2 S. 23<sup>24</sup>. It has lately been found in the form Dudu on the Amarna tablets.† The versions, with the exception of ℣, take the word as appellative, son of his (Abimelech's) uncle (father's brother). — A man of Issachar] on the text see note. — He resided at Shamir in Mt. Ephraim] there was also a Shamir in the Highlands of Judah (Jos. 15<sup>48</sup>). The Shamir of our text, the seat of a clan of Issachar, probably lay in the north-eastern part of the Highlands of Ephraim, not far from the plain of Jezreel. See on 5<sup>15</sup> (p. 151). The branches of Issachar which established themselves south of that valley, had their settlements among those of the great tribe of Joseph, and, like Benjamin on the south, seem frequently to be included when it is spoken of.‡ Shamir has not been identified. Schwarz suggested Sānūr, a ruined stronghold on a detached rocky hill about midway between Nābulus and Ġenin;§ but this seems to be too far south and west for a settlement of Issachar, and there is no other argument for the identification than the very dubious one of similarity of sound. — 2. He judged Israel twenty-three years]

† In the inscription of Mesha king of Moab (l. 12), מרר seems to be the name of a divinity. The Dūdu of the Amarna letters (Winckler, Thontafelfund von El Amarna, No. 38, l. 1, &c.) is apparently a Canaanite official at the Egyptian court. See also Sayce, Higher Criticism, p. 215.

‡ This may account, on the other hand, for the fact that Issachar is not named in places where we should expect it, as in ch. 4 and 6–8.

the same formula is used of each of the Minor Judges, also of Jephthah (12<sup>7</sup>) and Samson (15<sup>20</sup>), but not of any of the other heroes of the book. On the chronology, see Introduction, § 7. — He died and was buried in Shamir] from this notice, which, mutatis mutandis, is repeated in the case of the other Minor Judges, we are probably to infer that the tomb of the eponymous ancestor of the clan was in later times shown at Shamir.* Cf. 2<sup>9</sup>.

Hollenberg (ZATW. i. p. 104 f.) infers that in Ⲭ and the versions a name, קָרַח (2 K. 25<sup>23</sup> Jer. 40<sup>8</sup>), has fallen out, and that the original text read: 'Tola the son of Puah, the son of Kareah, his (Abimelech's) uncle, a man of Issachar.' The conjecture is attractive, but hardly sound: the suff. in דורו naturally refers to Puah, not to Abimelech; and to explain how a brother of the Manassite Jerubbaal could be of Issachar, we should have to travel quite outside the text. ‡ The recension of Ⲫ which furnishes this name omits the words, a man of Issachar, which the scheme requires. Perhaps Καριε is only a corruption and displacement of Issachar. § — [איש יששכר] the definite, the man of Issachar, is out of place; I should emend, איש מיששכר (cf. See critical note. — And they had thirty towns; these are still called Havoth-jair, and are in the land of Gilead] havvoth may have originally denoted, like the Arabic hiwā', with which it is commonly connected,† a group of Bedawin tents; but with the transition to pastoral life it would naturally be applied to more permanent settlements. In the O.T. it is used only of these Havoth-jair. It has been thought that the name Hivvite is of the same origin.‡ The conflicting statements about the number and situation of the Havoth-jair have been a source of considerable perplexity to commentators; see a full discussion of the difficulties in Studer. The original account of the conquest of this district is in Nu. 32<sup>39, 41f.</sup>, a passage which belongs to the oldest stratum of Hebrew historiography and is akin to Jud. 1. § In connexion with the conquest of Gilead by Machir, Jair took the havvoth of the Amorites in Gilead (cf. v.<sup>39</sup>), whence they are called Havoth-jair; while Nobah took Kenath with its dependencies and gave it his own name, Nobah. || These fragmentary old notices are now incorporated in the younger history of the Mosaic conquest of the lands east of the Jordan: the conquest of this region by Machir (Manasseh), however, falls apparently in the period of the Judges, i.e. after the main body of Israel had established themselves west of the Jordan. ¶ In entire accord with Nu. 32<sup>41</sup> is Jud. 10<sup>4</sup>, according to which the Havoth-jair, thirty in number, were in the land of Gilead (cf. also 1 Chr. 2<sup>22</sup>). Other passages, which put them in Bashan, are the result of later misunderstanding; so Dt. 3<sup>14</sup> cf. v.<sup>4</sup> (sixty fortified cities), and

The word is connected by Abulw. with Arab. ḥayy, 'tents of a clan, clan, kindred' (see above, p. 83 f.); similarly Cler. (on Nu. 32<sup>41</sup>), comparing Arab. ḥiwā', 'group of tents, camp.' In the framework of the book, in which the stories of the judges are set, the leading motives of this overture are generally repeated in a sentence or two of set phrases, but in one or two cases they are more fully developed (3<sup>7-10</sup> 6<sup>7-10</sup>), while in the passage before us they are expanded to almost as great length as in 2<sup>11ff.</sup> We have learned that 2<sup>11ff.</sup> is not entirely the work of the author of our Book of Judges (D), but contains the substance of an older introduction, conceived in a similar spirit, which we saw reason to attribute to an elohistic source (E).* The same phenomena meet us again in 10<sup>6-16</sup>: with the characteristic phrases of D is intermingled another strain, which toward the end predominates; and the affinity of this element with E is here even more evident than in the former case. Why this extended introduction should stand thus in the middle of the book is not apparent. It may have its explanation in a different order of the pre-Deuteronomic Book of Judges. Stade surmises that in E it immediately followed the story of Ehud (3<sup>15-30</sup>), and that its sequel has not been preserved.† Budde conjectures that it was E's introduction to the account of the Philistine oppression.‡ As it does not appear that E contained a story of Samson, it would then be supposed, further, that in its original connexion it was followed by the history of the Philistine aggressions in the time of Samuel and Saul.

On 10<sup>6-16</sup> see Stade, ZATW. i. p. 341-343, GVI. i. p. 70; Budde, Richt. u. Sam., p. 128 f.; Kuenen, HCO<sup>2</sup>, i. p. 340 f.; Kittel, GdH. i. 2. p. 8. — Stade urges the resemblance of the non-Deuteronomic elements in the passage to Jos. 24 (E<sub>2</sub>). To that source he ascribes v.<sup>6b, 8</sup> (except the Israelites 1<sup>0</sup> and the 18 years) 10<sup>*. 13f.* 14f.</sup>; even v.<sup>11f.</sup> appears to have an elohistic basis. § Budde's analysis is very similar. Kue. and Kitt., on the contrary, discover no traces of E. The former ascribes the passage as a whole to D: the latter attributes v.<sup>8f. 8b. 10a (?)</sup> || to Ri. (redactor of the older Book of Stories of the Judges), the rest to R<sup>d</sup> (redactor of the present Book of Judges); the suggestions of E in the latter are due to a peculiar predilection of the last redactor for the style of E.

Cf. 2<sup>14.20</sup> 3<sup>8</sup> 4<sup>2</sup> 1 S. 12<sup>9</sup>. — The Philistines and the Ammonites] the author of these words intended 10<sup>6ff.</sup> to stand as an introduction not only to the Ammonite oppression (10<sup>17</sup>–12<sup>7</sup>), but to the Philistine supremacy. Of the latter, however, there is no further mention in the following context; it is the Ammonites who, after crushing Israel east of the Jordan, invade Judah, Benjamin, and Ephraim. The Philistine domination begins with 13<sup>1</sup> (Samson), and continues to the time of Samuel (1 S. 7, E). In their present connexion, the words, into the power of the Philistines, are manifestly out of place. They may have been inserted by the latest editor for the purpose of extending the scope of the introduction to include ch. 13–16. The alternative is to suppose, with Budde, that in E 10<sup>6-16</sup> originally prefaced the account of the Philistine oppression.* This is perhaps the more probable hypothesis. — On the Ammonites cf. 3<sup>13</sup>, and see on 11<sup>4</sup>. — 8. And they broke and crushed the Israelites in that year eighteen years] from what follows the subject appears to be the Ammonites only. The impossible collocation, in that year eighteen years, must be attributed to editorial interpolation or composition. The eighteen years probably belong to D's chronology (cf. 6<sup>1</sup> 13<sup>1</sup>); in that year is more suitable to the verbs at the beginning of the verse, which suggest a signal catastrophe rather than long-continued subjugation and oppression, and may, as Kittel thinks, be from the source from which ch. 11<sup>4ff.</sup> is derived.† D's text may then have run: And he sold them into the power of the Ammonites eighteen years. — The rest of the verse, with v.<sup>9a</sup> appears to be an expansion of the Israelites, v.<sup>8a</sup>; the oppression was universal, both east and west of the Jordan. — The land of the Amorites, which is in Gilead] cf. 11<sup>19ff.</sup>; the relation to the latter passage is additional evidence of the late date of v.<sup>8b</sup>. — 9. The construction is changed in the middle, and v.<sup>11</sup> thus left without its predicate (liberavi vos). † Such an anacoluthon is, however, awkward in this simple sentence, and the disorder is perhaps due to transcriptional error. varieties of heathenism in v.<sup>6</sup>,* corresponds to 2<sup>14b</sup> (he sold them into the power of their enemies on all sides), as v.<sup>6aβ</sup> to 2<sup>13</sup>. The text of E, as is frequently the case with such lists, has been amplified by a later editor; originally it must have contained the names of the peoples whose oppressions had been related in E's Book of Judges, and probably in the order of his narrative. If it had been preserved intact, it would have given us a valuable criterion for the reconstruction of his work. The editor, on the contrary, has accumulated the names of neighbouring nations without any discoverable principle of selection or order. We read in it the names of some which nowhere else appear as oppressors, while we miss others, notably Moab and Midian, which we should certainly expect to find. — The Amorites] this is referred by the commentators to Sihon king of Heshbon (Nu. 21<sup>21ff.</sup>); † but how the invasion and conquest of the Amorites by Israel, which is there narrated, can be converted into an oppression of Israel by the Amorites, ‡ and put in conjunction with the tyranny of the Egyptians, they do not explain. The name is omitted by S. — The Ammonites] the only Ammonite oppression recorded in the book is that in the following chapter, from which they were delivered by Jephthah; we should not expect to find it referred to in this introduction as a thing of the past. In 3<sup>13</sup> the Ammonites are named as allies of Moab under Eglon, but since Moab itself is not named in our catalogue the supposition that the writer was here thinking of Eglon's time is excluded. The omission of Moab was felt by the versions to be unaccountable, and the name is introduced by G after the Ammonites, § by S instead of the Amorites. — The Philistines] in immediate connexion with the Ammonites, as in v.<sup>7</sup>. among the northern Canaanites, in virtue of which they supported them in their wars with Israel,* are hypotheses which admit of no refutation, because they have no foundation. More probably the introduction of the Sidonians here is due to the mention of them in v.<sup>6b</sup>; cf. 1 K. 11<sup>33</sup>. — Amalek] the Amalekites are named in 3<sup>13</sup> as allies of Eglon, in 6<sup>3, 33</sup> as joining Midian in its annual raids.† Others refer to Ex. 17<sup>8ff.</sup> — Maon] the Maonites first appear in Chronicles as enemies of Jehoshaphat of Judah (2 Chr. 20<sup>1</sup>), and of Uzziah (2 Chr. 26<sup>7</sup>); they are mentioned also in the time of Hezekiah (1 Chr. 4<sup>41</sup>). Their seats were south of the Dead Sea; in all probability the name is preserved in Ma'an,‡ on the old caravan road from Damascus to Arabia, four hours east of Petra. The occurrence of the name in this list of early oppressors of Israel is hard to explain. Of the ancient versions T alone agrees with H; some recensions of G have Midian; others, with L, Canaan; S has Ammon here. That Midian should be omitted from the list altogether after the story of Gideon (ch. 6–8) is quite as strange as that Maon should be included, and very many critics adopt the emendation suggested by G, Midian.§ The emendation is so self-evident that it is suspicious. It is possible, after all, that the editor, who, as the whole catalogue proves, was little concerned about historical accuracy, may have written the name of an Arab people of his own times, the Minaeans.¶ The omission of Midian is not more strange than that of Moab. The two armies confronted one another, but the Israelites had no leader. This representation does not agree with 11<sup>29</sup>, from which it appears that Jephthah had to raise the clans himself; the latter verse is, however, probably from the hand of an editor; cf. also 11<sup>4</sup>. — 18. The people, the chiefs of Gilead] the words are explained as a restrictive apposition,† but the technical name does not render the expression any less awkward. Perhaps the original text has been glossed. — They anxiously inquire where they shall find a champion and leader. XI. 1–XII. 7. — Jephthah delivers Gilead from the Ammonites. — Jephthah the Gileadite has been driven from his home to the adjacent Syrian district of Tob, where, with a band of wild fellows, he leads the life of a freebooter (11<sup>1-3</sup>). When the Ammonites make war on Gilead, the elders persuade him to come and take command against the enemy, promising to make him the head chief of all Gilead. He returns with them, and is made chief by the people (v.<sup>4-11</sup>). He sends messengers to the king of Ammon, contesting his claim to the lands between the Jabbok and the Arnon: Israel conquered this territory from the Amorites and has held it undisputed for three hundred years. The Ammonites refusing to recognize Israel's title, hostilities commence (v.<sup>12-29</sup>). Jephthah vows that if Yahweh gives him victory, he will sacrifice the first who comes out of his house to meet him on his return (v.<sup>30f.</sup>). He subdues the Ammonites, taking from them twenty cities (v.<sup>32f.</sup>). Returning in triumph to Mizpah, his only daughter comes out to meet him, heading the chorus of women. The father's heart is rent, but he can not take back his word; after a respite of two months, he performs his vow. The fate of Jephthah's daughter is commemorated by the women of Israel in an annual four days' festival (v.<sup>34-40</sup>).

The Ephraimites are jealous because they were not called out for the war, and cross the Jordan to avenge the slight, but are beaten by Jephthah. In their flight many are cut off by the Gileadites at the fords of the Jordan, being betrayed by their pronunciation (12<sup>1-6</sup>). After judging Israel for six years, Jephthah dies and is buried in Gilead (v.<sup>7</sup>).

The long diplomatic communication, defending Israel's title to Gilead (11<sup>12-28</sup>), is manifestly foreign to the original story.* The historical argument is derived chiefly, and in part verbally, from Nu. 20, 21 (see comm. below); and, though purporting to be an answer to the claim of the Ammonites (v.<sup>13</sup>), in reality deals exclusively with Israel's relation to the Moabites (v.<sup>17, 18</sup>).† Even in the appeal to the king (v.<sup>24</sup>), the name of Chemosh, the national god of Moab, stands, instead of Milcom, the god of Ammon; and the conduct of the present king is contrasted with that of Balak king of Moab, who waged no war with Israel. The cities named in v.<sup>26</sup> are well known Moabite cities.‡ There is general agreement among critics that 11<sup>12-28</sup> is a late interpolation, the motive of which is to establish the title of Israel to its possessions between the Arnon and the Jabbok.§ The insertion of this long speech has done some injury to the margins of the original narrative. Verses <sup>30, 31</sup> are violently severed from v.<sup>11a</sup>, of which they are the original sequel; v.<sup>11b</sup> seems to belong after v.<sup>31</sup>; v.<sup>29</sup> is further a very awkward redactional doublet to v.<sup>32</sup>, necessitated by the intrusion of v.<sup>12-28</sup> before v.<sup>30f</sup>. See comm. on the verses. At the beginning of ch. 11, the editor seems to have endeavoured with indifferent success to make out something more definite about the hero's origin, taking the hint from v.<sup>7</sup>. Chapter 12<sup>1-6</sup> is regarded by Wellhausen as a later appendix to the story. The difficulties in the connexion of these verses with ch. 11 are, however, exaggerated; the story does not bear the marks of a late fabrication; and there seems to be no sufficient reason why it may not be from the same hand with 11<sup>4-11, 30-40</sup>. See more fully below, and cf. on 8<sup>1-3</sup>.

† Even in v.<sup>15</sup>, where alone they are named, the Ammonites come only in the second place.

‡ Nu. 21<sup>24-26</sup> treats the whole kingdom of Sihon, from the Jabbok to the Arnon, as having been originally Moabite.

§ The occasion of the interpolation may have been the intrusion of the Ammonites into the old territory of Israel at the beginning of the 6th century, cf. Jer. 49<sup>1</sup>.

Wellhausen and Stade find in the story of Jephthah no historical elements at all. Jephthah himself is a shadowy figure, whose origin and end are equally obscure; of his great victory over the Ammonites, we are told nothing definite. The whole point lies in the sacrifice of his daughter, which serves to explain the Gileadite women's festival.* Stade infers from 11<sup>1</sup> that Jephthah was the heros eponymus of a despised Gileadite clan, or one not of full blood. Goldziher treats Jephthah and his offering as mythical.† The objections to the historical character of the hero and of the main features of the story do not seem to be sufficiently well founded. That the circumstances of his victories over the Ammonites were not remembered, or are not more fully narrated here, does not prove that nothing of the sort happened; the mythical features which may be recognized in the annual celebration of the women of Gilead may have attached themselves to an historical event such as is here related. ‡

1-3. Jephthah's antecedents.—The bastard son of Gilead, he is driven from home by his brothers, and with a band of free companions lives the life of a marauder in the district of Tob. The facts in this introduction are drawn from the story, which must have begun by telling who Jephthah was, and probably how he came to be in Tob (cf. v.<sup>5</sup>). The genealogical notice which makes him a son of Gilead (v.<sup>1b</sup>) is clearly not original; with it naturally falls the story of his expulsion by the legitimate sons of Gilead (v.<sup>2</sup>). From v.<sup>7</sup> we should rather infer that he had been banished by the authorities, the elders of Gilead. A not unnatural misunderstanding of the latter verse may have given rise to v.<sup>1b. 2</sup>. §

1. Jephthah the Gileadite was a great warrior] 6<sup>12</sup> 1 S. 9<sup>1</sup>.—He was the son of a harlot] cf. Abimelech, 8<sup>31</sup> 9<sup>18</sup>. The trait may very well belong to the original story. || The following words, on the contrary, and Gilead begot Jephthah, appear to be a misinterpretation of the patril adjective, the Gileadite, in the sense and form of the later genealogical systems; Gilead is the name of a region or of its population ( $5^{17}$ ), not of a man. Having made this beginning, the editor understands Jephthah's words to the elders of Gilead in v.<sup>7</sup>, You have hated me and driven me out of my father's house, and his brethren (clansmen) v.<sup>3</sup>, literally, and combining it with v.<sup>1a</sup> (Jephthah a bastard), interprets the whole situation in v.<sup>2</sup>: the legitimate sons drove out their illegitimate half-brother.*

— 2. Besides Jephthah, Gilead had sons by his lawful wife. When they grew up, they drove Jephthah away. — Thou shalt have no inheritance in our father's house, for thou art the son of another woman] if v.<sup>1b.2</sup> were an integral part of the old story, and therefore to be interpreted historically, we might, with Stade, regard Jephthah as the name of a Gileadite clan which did not stand on an equal footing with the others of its kin. But as the name nowhere occurs in this character,† and nothing in the subsequent story suggests anything of the kind, the solution adopted above seems preferable. — 3. Jephthah fled from his brethren] cf. v.<sup>7</sup>; expelled from his father's house. — The district of Tob] v.<sup>5</sup>. In the fertile region adjacent to this city they probably early settled down to agriculture, but the great body of the tribe seems to have always remained at least semi-nomadic. Bedawin along the margin of the Syrian desert have always done. Not seldom their invasions had a more serious character. An Ammonite attack on Jabesh-gilead was the occasion which made Saul king (1 S. 11<sup>18</sup>); David waged an embittered war against them (2 S. 10-12). — 5. See above on v.<sup>4</sup>. — The elders of Gilead] v.<sup>8, 9, 10, 11</sup> cf. 8<sup>16</sup>; the heads of the families and clans; with a modern word, the sheikhs. Gilead is often used for the whole territory occupied by Israel east of the Jordan, as Canaan for their possessions on the west of the river. This territory, whose natural boundaries are the Yarmūk on the north and Wady Mōgib (Arnon) on the south, is divided by the Zerqā (Jabbok) into two parts, the northern of which is now called Ġebel 'Aglūn, the southern, the Belqā. In such a state of society, expulsion from the clan is far more than banishment; it makes a man an outcast and an outlaw. The justice or injustice of his banishment is not mooted; † they have, in any case, no reason to expect help from him. — 8. Therefore we have now returned to thee] the particle refers, not to the last words of Jephthah (because we are in straits), but to his first question: Because we did banish thee, we have now sought thee out to bring thee back. — So go with us and fight with the Ammonites, and thou shalt be our chief, even of all the inhabitants of Gilead] 10<sup>18</sup>. Such a sentence may also be conceived as conditional: If thou wilt go . . . thou shalt be, &c.; but it is a mistake to regard this as a form of the Hebrew conditional sentence. — 9. 11. Jephthah goes with them, and the people acclaim him chief and dictator; cf. 9<sup>6</sup>. So Saul is acclaimed king by all the people at Gilgal (1 S. 11<sup>15</sup>); Rehoboam goes to Shechem to be made king by all Israel (1 K. 12<sup>1</sup>); Jeroboam is made king there by the northern tribes (1 K. 12<sup>20</sup>); cf. also 1 K. 1<sup>9ff.</sup> (Adonijah), v. 33<sup>ff.</sup> (Solomon). It has been generally inferred from v. 11<sup>b</sup>, in connexion with 10<sup>17</sup>, that Jephthah was acclaimed at Mizpah. This is in itself highly probable; the Gileadites would naturally assemble for the purpose at their principal holy-place (cf. 9<sup>6</sup> 1 S. 11<sup>15</sup> 1 K. 1<sup>9.33</sup> 12<sup>1</sup> &c.). But 10<sup>17</sup> is part of the editor's introduction, and 11<sup>1b</sup> is misplaced; it originally stood in close connexion with v. 30<sup>ff.</sup>, from which it has been separated by the interpolation of v. 12-20, and closer examination shows that its proper place is after v. 31, not before v. 30; see below. — Jephthah uttered all his words before Yahweh at Mizpah] at the holy place, before the stele, altar, or idol, in which the deity was believed to dwell, or which symbolized his presence; cf. 1 S. 1<sup>9</sup> (6) 15. 19 7<sup>6</sup> 10<sup>19.25</sup> 11<sup>15</sup> 15<sup>33</sup> 2 S. 5<sup>3</sup> 21<sup>9</sup> 6<sup>5.14</sup> 2 K. 19<sup>14</sup>. In the present context the words can only mean, he repeated before Yahweh what he had said to the elders of Gilead when they came to solicit his aid (v. 9).* The only object in such a repetition would be to bind them by a religious sanction to keep their promise; but in that case he must have made them solemnly repeat their pledge (v. 8. 10), his words would not hold them; and, furthermore, the promise of the elders had already been fulfilled by the people (v. 11a). On the other hand, the statement is pertinent, if indeed it is not indispensable, in the account of Jephthah's vow, v. 30<sup>ff.</sup> cf. v. 35. 38; see further on v. 31. — Mizpah is not Mizpah in Benjamin (Jos. 18<sup>26</sup> Jud. 20 21 1 S. 7 10<sup>17</sup> Neh. 3<sup>7</sup>

From Jos. 13<sup>26</sup> רָמַת הַמִּצְפָּה Ramath-mizpeh, it is frequently inferred that Mizpah of Gilead is the same with Ramoth-gilead (1 K. 4<sup>13</sup>), which was the seat of an ancient sanctuary (Jos. 20<sup>8</sup> Dt. 4<sup>48</sup>), and a strong place of great importance in the Syrian wars (1 K. 22<sup>3ff.</sup> 2 K. 8<sup>28</sup> 9<sup>1ff.</sup>). According to Euseb. (OS<sup>2</sup>. 287<sub>91</sub>), Ramoth was a village 15 m. W. of Philadelphia ('Ammān), perhaps the modern es-Salt. ‡ ⓊLa. al. omit v.<sup>5a</sup>.

§ We should naturally look for the Mizpah of Gen. 31<sup>49</sup> on the Aramaean frontier, in northern Gilead.

Jephthah denies the claim of the Ammonites to this region : Israel took no land from Moab or Ammon ; on the contrary, it scrupulously respected the rights of Edom and Moab ; when denied a passage through those countries, it made a long circuit to the east, avoiding them altogether, and never crossed the Arnon, the border of Moab (v.<sup>14-18</sup>). But when Sihon, the Amorite king of Heshbon, refused them transit, they invaded and conquered his kingdom, which extended from the Jabbok to the Arnon, and from the eastern desert to the Jordan. What Chemosh has given to his people they possess by right ; Israel has the same title to the lands which Yahweh has given them by conquest (v.<sup>19-24</sup>). The claim now set up is a new one : * Balak, who was king of Moab when Israel occupied this region, did not assert his title to it by going to war with them ; for three hundred years Israel has dwelt unmolested in Heshbon and the other cities which Ammon now claims. The wrong is wholly on the side of the invader. Yahweh shall decide between them (v.<sup>25-28</sup>). The representations of Jephthah's ambassadors are unheeded, the spirit of Yahweh (battle fury) comes upon him, and he passes over to fight with the Ammonites (v.<sup>29</sup>).—On the interpolation, see above, p. 283.

12. Jephthah demands of the king what right the Ammonites have to invade the territory of Israel. — What have I to do with thee] 2 K. 3<sup>18</sup> &c. ; what is there between us to justify this war ? The question is asked only to give occasion to the following historical disquisition. I is really Israel, as in v.<sup>27</sup>, not Jephthah. —

13. The king answers that Israel had taken possession of lands belonging to Ammon. — From the Arnon to the Jabbok, and to the Jordan] the territory in dispute was bounded by the Arnon on the south and the Jabbok on the north, and extended westward to the Jordan. The eastern limit was the Syrian desert (v.<sup>22</sup>). The Arnon, now Wady Mōgib, flows from the east into the Dead Sea, about midway between its northern and southern ends. The valley of the Mōgib is a deep ravine with precipitous walls.* — The Jabbok, now Nahr ez-Zerqā (Blue River), is the principal eastern affluent of the Jordan, into which it falls about two-fifths of the way from the Dead Sea to the Sea of Galilee. It also flows through a deep ravine, which divides the high lands into two regions of very different character, the Belqā and Ġebel 'Aġlūn. The sources of the stream are near 'Ammān (Rabbah of the Ammonites), whence it flows, first in an easterly, then in a north-westerly course, then almost due west till it emerges from the mountains.—So now restore them peaceably] the plural pronoun (fem.) must be understood of the cities in this region; cf. v.<sup>33</sup>. * —14, 15. Jephthah's answer is a general denial: Israel did not take territory from either Moab or Ammon; cf. Dt. 2<sup>9, 10</sup>. Thus far, the controversy has been with Ammon only; now Moab is introduced by the side of Ammon; what follows has reference exclusively to Israel's relations to Moab, and the argument has no bearing at all on the point which is supposed to be in dispute; see above, p. 283. As a matter of fact, the cities north of the Arnon were Moabite, as we know both from the Moabite inscription of King Mesha and from the prophets (Is. 15 16 Jer. 48 &c.).† The only Ammonite city named in the O.T. is Rabbah (Philadelphia, 'Ammān). The Ammonites profited by the disasters of Israel, and occupied a considerable part of the old territory of Gad (Jer. 49<sup>1</sup> Ez. 25<sup>1ff.</sup>; cf. 1 Macc. 5<sup>6ff.</sup>).—16. Israel went in the desert as far as the Red Sea, and came to Kadesh] the first words are generally thought to refer to the crossing of the Red Sea (Ex. 13<sup>18</sup> 14), but apart from the strangeness both of the expression itself and of the juxtaposition with the following, the mention of the fact has no relevancy in this connexion. this embassy is now found in the Pentateuch, and as there is no apparent reason why an editor should have omitted it, if it existed in his sources, it may fairly be doubted whether the author of our passage had any authority for the statement. It is not necessary to suppose that the author means the eastern boundary; † he may have represented the Israelites as keeping beyond the limit of settlement on the east of Moab till they crossed the wadies which ran into the Arnon from the east, and then turning westward along the northern side of the Arnon; this is apparently the representation of Nu. 21<sup>13</sup>.

monites, and in both the Jabbok is the boundary between their conquests and the possessions of Ammon. This seems to mean that the upper course of the Jabbok, whose general direction is north,* formed the eastern frontier of the Israelite territory in this quarter, along which they bordered on Ammon. In Jud. 11<sup>13, 22</sup>, however, the Jabbok is clearly the northern boundary of the region in dispute, which extends eastward to the desert (v.<sup>22</sup>), leaving no place at all for Ammon.

Question of indignant surprise; cf. on v.<sup>6</sup>. — 24. Shouldst thou not possess the territory of those whom Chemosh thy god dispossesses,† and we possess the territory of all whom Yahweh our god dispossesses?] the translation is as literal as possible, preserving, at some sacrifice of English idiom, the recurring verb. The conquests of a people are the conquests of its god, who bestows upon them the territory of the conquered; they hold it by a divine right which should be respected by others who hold their own territories by the like title. — Chemosh is the national god of Moab (1 K. 11<sup>33</sup> cf. 11<sup>7</sup> 2 K. 23<sup>13</sup>), and Moab is the people of Chemosh (Nu. 21<sup>29</sup> Jer. 48<sup>46</sup>), just as Yahweh is the god of Israel, and Israel the people of Yahweh. So in the inscription of Mesha, king of Moab, we read that the king of Israel oppressed Moab a long time, "because Chemosh was angry with his land" (l. 5f.); he erects a sanctuary to Chemosh in gratitude for deliverance (l. 3).‡ The reality and power of the national god of Moab were no more doubted by the old Israelites than those of Yahweh himself. A conspicuous illustration of this is 2 K. 3<sup>27</sup>, where a signal disaster of the Israelite arms before the capital of Moab is attributed to the fury of Chemosh, excited by the sacrifice of the king's son.§ The national god of the Ammonites, on the contrary, was Milcom

Others are inclined to assume that Milcom may also have been called Chemosh;‡ or that Chemosh is a slip of the pen on the part of the author;§ or a scribe's blunder. || But the whole preceding and following context has to do with Moab only, and the name of Chemosh is not an accident to be explained by itself; the error runs through the whole learned argument.

If this be the case, the figures must have been inserted by the last editor, or a still later hand.† The connexion of v.<sup>26</sup> with the preceding would be much more intimate if the number were omitted: Did Balak make any opposition when Israel settled in Heshbon . . . Why didst thou (Moab) not reclaim them at that time. — 27. Israel has in no way offended against Ammon; the latter is altogether in the wrong in the present invasion. — I have committed no fault] the I is Israel, not Jephthah; see above on v.<sup>12</sup>. — Let Yahweh, who is arbiter to-day, decide between Israelites and Ammonites] the order of the words seems to favour this construction, ‡ rather than that which connects to-day with the principal verb, Let Yahweh the judge decide to-day. § Compare in general, 1 S. 24<sup>11f. 15</sup> Gen. 31<sup>53</sup> 16<sup>5</sup>. ||

[הָשִׁיב טוֹב אֶחָּהּ] the words are regarded by many as standing in the same relation to each other as the following נָלַחַם נִלְחַם אִם, the first טוֹב being inf. absol., the second, participle. ¶ So Schm.; Roorda, § 565; Ew. § 312 a; SS. There is no similar case (Roorda); and we should perhaps have to suppose that the bold and unusual construction was suggested by the analogy of the following clauses. Others take both words as adjectives, the reiteration being emphatic, art thou so much better (Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 133, 1 n.; Green, § 296, 3 a). The analogy of the following clauses may be recognized also in this explanation. It is not to be assumed that the writer was conscious of the grammatical difference which we make between adj., ptp., and inf. abs.; for him טוֹב was טוֹב. — Ⓢ<sup>BN</sup> μὴ ἐν ἀγαθῷ ἀγαθώτερος σὺ πρὸς Βαλακ (= Ⓢ): Ⓢ<sup>APVLMG</sup> εἰ θ' ἢ μὴ κρείσσων εἶ σὺ κ.τ.έ. 30, 31. Jephthah's vow. — These verses should stand immediately after v.<sup>11a</sup>; having been acclaimed chieftain by the people, Jephthah vows that if Yahweh will give him victory over the Ammonites, he will offer him a human sacrifice, v.<sup>30, 31</sup>; these fateful words were uttered before Yahweh at Mizpah, v.<sup>11b</sup> cf. v.<sup>35, 36</sup>. He then puts himself at the head of the people and marches against the Ammonites, v.<sup>32</sup>. The order has been deranged by the introduction of v.<sup>12-29</sup>, and perhaps still further by the accidental consequences of the interpolation; see above on v.<sup>11</sup>. —

Sed quem potuit cogitare primitus occurrentem, qui filios alios non habebat? Like other verbs of motion, when the goal is personal, עבר is construed with אל (על), v.<sup>32</sup> 12<sup>8</sup> &c. See Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 118, 2. The instances where the acc. is found (poet. and late; cf. 1 S. 13<sup>20</sup>), only make it more probable that in our verse we have the language of a comparatively late redactor. — 31. הויצא אשר יצא the cognate subject appears to emphasize the indefiniteness (universality) of the promise, Whoever it may be. — יצא לקראת מלך is used only of persons; יצא מרדתי בתי would not be said of domestic animals. — והיה ליהודה והעליתיהו עליה the last words explain the first, which by themselves might be understood in the sense of 1 S. 11<sup>1</sup>. Moses Kimchi interpreted the second clause as an alternative, Shall be consecrated to Yahweh (if unfit for sacrifice), or (if suitable) I will offer it as a burnt offering. See below, note on v.<sup>40</sup>. — 33. The Ammonite Aroer is named only here and in Jos. 13<sup>25</sup>, ער ערוער אשר על פני רבבה. Among the women who celebrate the victory with choral dances his only daughter comes joyfully to meet him. The father is in despair, but he must keep his fatal vow. The maiden receives her doom in a heroic spirit; she is ready to die, since Yahweh has avenged her father of his foes; she only asks two months' respite to mourn her maidenhood. Cler. The sound exegetical sense of Luther rejected these rationalistic subterfuges; in the marginal note on 11<sup>89</sup> he writes: Man will, er habe sie nicht geopfert, aber der Text steht klar da (Be.). The literal interpretation is maintained by the Jesuit commentator Serarius, as well as by Seb. Schmid, Pfeiffer, al.; while L. Cappel modified it by the hypothesis that the necessary implication of the vow was, that if the first living thing which met him on his return was not sacrificable, it should be put to death as  $\text{חַרֵּם}$ , and that this was the fate of his daughter.† The interpretation which resolves the sacrifice into a “spiritual burnt offering” has found expositors in modern times in Hengstenberg, Reinke, Auberlen, Cass., Köhler, König (Hauptprobleme, p. 74 f.), al.; see Be. ad loc. On the other side are Vatke, Stud., Ew., Hitz., Oehler, Diestel, H. Schultz, Reuss, Nöld., Kue., We., Sta., Baudissin, Kitt., WRSmith, al.—A parallel from classical legend is the story of Idomeneus told by Servius on Aeneid, xi. 264: ‡ Idomeneus rex Cretensium fuit; qui, cum tempestate laboraret, vovit se sacrificaturum Neptuno de re, quae ei primo occurrisset, si reversus fuisset; sed casu cum ei filius primus occurrisset, quem cum, ut alii dicunt, immolasset, ut alii, immolare voluisset, ob crudelitatem regno a civibus pulsus est. The story of Iphigeneia suggests itself to every one.\* The annual lamentation of the women of Gilead for Jephthah's daughter appears to belong to a class of ceremonies, the original significance of which, often disguised by the myth, is mourning for the death of a god,† and in many of which evidence of primitive connexion with human sacrifices survives. In the last respect the parallel with Iphigeneia is instructive; for Iphigeneia was originally a name of Artemis Tauropolos, at whose festival at Brauron, and afterwards at Athens, a human sacrifice was enacted, even to the point of causing the blood to spirt from the victim's throat under the sacrificial knife.‡ At Laodicea on the Phoenician coast, the annual sacrifice of a stag was regarded as a substitute for the more ancient sacrifice of a maiden.§ The native goddess to whom the offering was made is identified by Pausanias (iii. 16, 8), doubtless on this account, with the Brauronian Artemis. There seems no good reason why we should not include the mourning for Jephthah's daughter in this class. As in the case of Iphigeneia, the original significance of the myth has been entirely lost in its translation into heroic legend. The presence of this primitive mythical element in the story of Jephthah's daughter does not strictly exclude the possibility that Jephthah himself and his victory over the Ammonites, and even the sacrifice of his daughter, may be historical. The latter, indeed, would give the simplest explanation of the way in which the myth was translated into legend.

XII. 1-7. Jephthah is assailed by the Ephraimites; he defeats them in battle and cuts off their retreat.—The Ephraimites cross the Jordan, threatening dire vengeance upon Jephthah because they were not called to join in the war against the Ammonites (v.<sup>1</sup>). Jephthah replies that the Gileadites in their contest with Ammon had sought the aid of Ephraim in vain; seeing that there was no help to be got from them, they had hazarded unsupported an invasion of Ammon; why should the Ephraimites now attack them? (v.<sup>2f</sup>). He assembles his tribesmen and defeats Ephraim. The fugitives are intercepted in their flight at the fords of the Jordan, and, being betrayed by a peculiarity of their speech, are slaughtered on the spot (v.<sup>4-6</sup>). Jephthah, * Especially in that form of the legend in which Artemis demands Iphigeneia as a victim in fulfilment of her father's vow, made in the year of her birth, to sacrifice the fairest thing that the year should bring forth (Eurip., Iphig. Taur. 18 ff.).

after judging Israel six years, dies and is buried somewhere in Gilead.

Wellhausen regards 12<sup>1-6</sup> as secondary.* it comes too late, since in 11<sup>34</sup> Jephthah is already at home, and according to 11<sup>39</sup> at least two months have elapsed; the answer, 12<sup>2</sup>, affirming that the help of Ephraim had been sought and refused, does not accord with ch. 11; the whole conduct of the Ephraimites, who had no business on that side of the Jordan, and were not, as in 8<sup>1-3</sup>, inflated by victory, is here without motive. The story is a mere copy of 8<sup>1-3</sup>, "originating with some one who did not comprehend Gideon's conciliatory course, and wanted to give the arrogant tribe a slap." That Jephthah had returned and dismissed his forces is assumed by 12<sup>4</sup> also. The two months (11<sup>39</sup>) make no real difficulty: even if the Ephraimite invasion fell in that period, the writer would finish the story of Jephthah's vow before relating it. The resemblance to 8<sup>1-3</sup> is obvious; but it is not evident that 12<sup>1-6</sup> is a mere copy of 8<sup>1-3</sup>, with a variation animated by dislike of Ephraim.† The genuineness and historical character of the verses are rightly defended by Kuenen, Budde, Cornill, and Kittel. The shibboleth scene is too original to be attributed to a "tendency" fiction, especially as it has nothing to do with the supposed tendency. The exaggerated number of the slain is of itself no reason for rejecting the whole story.

sorely] so U; in H the second verb has been accidentally dropped; see crit. note. — I called upon you, but you did not deliver me from them] Jephthah speaks, not in his own name, but in that of his people, Gilead, to which the pronouns refer; cf. 11<sup>12.27</sup>. No such request is narrated in ch. 11, but the narrative there certainly does not exclude it. An unsuccessful attempt to get help from their stronger neighbours across the Jordan may very well be supposed to have preceded the mission of the elders of Gilead to recall Jephthah, with which the story of Jephthah begins. There was no occasion for mentioning such an attempt in that connexion. — 3. And when I saw that thou wouldst not deliver, I took my life in my hand] 1 S. 19<sup>5</sup> 28<sup>21</sup>; cf. Jud. 9<sup>17</sup>. — 4. So Jephthah collected all the men of Gilead] they had returned to their homes after the defeat of the Ammonites; the threatening move of Ephraim, therefore, did not follow at once upon Jephthah's victory. It is otherwise in 8<sup>1</sup>, where the whole situation is different. — And the men of Gilead beat Ephraim] the rest of the verse is wholly unintelligible. The current interpretation is fairly represented by RV.: "Because they (the Ephraimites) said, Ye are fugitives of Ephraim, ye Gileadites, in the midst of Ephraim, and in the midst of Manasseh." * They were not a tribe, but a crew of runaway Ephraimites; they had no tribal lands of their own, but lived by sufferance in the territories of Ephraim and Manasseh. This insult so exasperated the Gileadites that they followed up their victory with signal vindictiveness.† Neither the language nor the facts, however, allow this interpretation. The word rendered fugitive does not mean runagate, but survivor, one who escapes from a disastrous battle or the like peril, as in v.<sup>5</sup>; nor had the extraction or the situation of Jephthah's countrymen any resemblance to that with which they are supposed to be taunted. The origin of the corruption was the accidental repetition of a clause from v.<sup>5</sup>. ‡

The other codd. of the same recension (<sup>M</sup>, codd.<sup>54 59 82 106 108 128 134</sup>) omit from כִּי אָמְרוּ to the end of the verse. The words פְּלִיטֵי אֶפְרַיִם were copied out of place from v.<sup>5</sup>; אִתָּם was necessarily added to complete the structure of the clause. The origin of the rest of v.<sup>4b</sup> is not so obvious: the asyndeton בְּתוֹךְ אֶפְרַיִם בְּתוֹךְ מְנַשֶּׁה suggests that the latter is a correction of the unintelligible, in the midst of Ephraim.

6. The LXX understood שבלל to be a password or countersign (σύνθημα, see Schleusner, s.v.); this interpretation is most fully expressed in Θ<sup>M</sup>, καὶ ἔλεγον αὐτοῖς Ἐλπατε δὴ σύνθημα καὶ λέγοντες σύνθημα οὐ κατηύθυναν τοῦ λαλήσαι οὕτως, κ.τ.ε.; see Thdt., who is guided by the Syriac to the correct explanation. Vallarsi; OS<sup>2</sup>. 106). What the peculiarity of the Ephraimites' pronunciation was, we can of course not know; * still less should we make this verse the basis of extensive inferences about Hebrew dialects. — ולא יכין [לדבר כן] is referred by many recent comm. to the idiom לֵב לֵב 2 Chr. 12<sup>14</sup> 19<sup>3</sup> 30<sup>19</sup> Ezra 7<sup>10</sup>, with ellipsis of לֵב (Stud., Ges. Thes., al.), but the phrase itself does not seem to be old, and the alleged examples of the ellipsis (1 S. 23<sup>22</sup> 1 Chr. 28<sup>2</sup> 2 Chr. 29<sup>36</sup>) may be better explained in other ways. The impf., which must be taken as frequentative, is singular in the series of narrative tenses. Perhaps we should emend לֵב לֵב; in that case we should render כן thus, i.e. as the Gileadites pronounced it to them. — שָׁמָּה of human beings, 1 K. 18<sup>40</sup> 2 K. 10<sup>7</sup> 14 Jer. 41<sup>7</sup> &c.; often of human sacrifices, Ez. 23<sup>39</sup> Is. 57<sup>5</sup>.

Considerable weight has been laid upon this fact in some theories of the chronological system and composition of the book; see Introduction, § 4, 7.† In the notice of Jephthah's burial place there is evidently some corruption of the text. H reads, in the cities of Gilead (in one of the cities of Gilead, † is quite impossible); Θ and L render, in his city, Gilead, or, in his city in Gilead; S, in a city of Gilead. A literal translation of  $\text{Ἡ}$ , in the cities of Gilead, has given rise to the Midrash that Jephthah died by inches, by the sloughing off of his limbs (as in elephantiasis, Arab. ḡudām), which were buried where they fell; Bereshith rab., § 60.

8-10. Ibzan.—8. And there judged Israel after him] cf. 10<sup>3</sup>, "There arose after him and judged Israel." Through this verse the following series of Minor Judges is annexed to the story of Jephthah, as in 10<sup>1</sup> the former series to that of Abimelech. This is doubtless the work of the late editor who inserted the Minor Judges in the book; see Introduction, § 6.—Ibzan of Bethlehem] probably not Bethlehem in Judah,† but Bethlehem in Zebulun (Jos. 19<sup>15</sup>), now Beit Lahm, about seven miles WNW. of Nazareth, and a somewhat less distance west of Şaffūrieh.‡ The other judges of this group, as well as all those whose stories are told in the preceding chapters, belong to Israel; apart from the story of Othniel, Judah first appears incidentally in the story of Samson. The name Ibzan occurs nowhere else.—9. He had thirty sons, and he sent out thirty daughters] married them into other families.—And brought in from outside thirty daughters (as wives) for his sons] this is most naturally interpreted, as in the case of Jair (10<sup>3-5</sup>), of a clan with numerous branches and offshoots and many connexions with other clans.—He judged Israel for seven years] 10<sup>2</sup>; cf. 12<sup>7</sup> 15<sup>20</sup>.

11, 12. Elon.—The standing form in which the notices of the Minor Judges are cast appears here in its simplest terms; it contains nothing besides the name of the judge, his origin, burial place, and the length of his rule. See above, p. 270.—Elon the Zebulonite died, and was buried at Elon, in the land of Zebulun] Elon is a son of Zebulun, Gen. 46<sup>14</sup>, i.e. a Zebulonite clan, Nu. 26<sup>26</sup>. The distinction made in ¶ between the name of the hero and that of his burial place (seat of the clan) is artificial; cf. ¶.* The place is otherwise unknown.

13-15. Abdon. — The last of the Minor Judges is Abdon ben Hillel, of Pirathon in Ephraim. Pirathon was the home of one of David's heroes, Benaiah the Pirathonite; 2 S. 23<sup>30</sup> 1 Chr. 11<sup>31</sup> 27<sup>14</sup>; the name occurs also 1 Macc. 9<sup>50</sup>, Fl. Jos. xiii. 1, 3 § 15, in a list of places fortified by Bacchides. It is generally identified with Feratā, six miles WSW. of Nābulus (Shechem),† which Conder and others take for Ophrah; see on 6<sup>11</sup>. — According to v. 15, Pirathon was in the land of Ephraim, in the hill-country of the Amalekites. This is frequently combined with 5<sup>14</sup> (Ephraim, whose root is in Amalek), and the presence of the name in this part of Mt. Ephraim explained by supposing, either that the region was an older seat of the Amalekites, from which they had been expelled by the growing power of the Canaanites, or that in the early part of the period of the judges Amalekites from the south had intruded into this part of the highlands, and occupied it long enough to fasten their name upon it, but had been driven out again before the time of Saul. ‡ Text and context in 5<sup>14</sup> are, however, much too obscure to shed any light upon this verse. The name Abdon is found in the genealogical tables of the Chronicles, in Benjamin, 1 Chr. 8<sup>23</sup>, 8<sup>30</sup> = 9<sup>36</sup>.§ If Pirathon be Feratā, this coincidence must be regarded as accidental. || But Feratā seems to be too far north for the Pharathon of 1 Macc. and Josephus; and perhaps we should rather be guided by Chr. to look for Pirathon in Benjamin. Ewald conjectured that for Bedan, 1 S. 12<sup>11</sup>, Abdon should be restored; ¶ but the more probable correction is Barak.** — 14. He had forty sons and

XIII.—XVI. The adventures of Samson.

LITERATURE.† — A. v. Doorninck, "De Simsonsagen. Kritische studiën over Richteren 14–16," Th. T. xxviii. 1894, p. 14–32.

1. Samson's birth, ch. 13. — The Messenger of Yahweh appears to the wife of Manoah and promises her a son. During her pregnancy she shall observe a strict regimen, for her son shall be a devotee from birth (13<sup>1-7</sup>). At Manoah's prayer, the Messenger reappears and repeats his injunctions (v. 8-14). He ascends to heaven in the flames of the sacrifice (v. 15-23). The child is born, grows up, and begins to be possessed by the spirit of Yahweh (v. 24-25).

2. Samson's marriage to the Timnathite, and what came of it; ch. 14, 15. — Samson resolves to marry the daughter of a Philistine of Timnath (14<sup>1-4</sup>). On one of his visits to Timnath he encounters a lion in the way, and kills him with his bare hands. Some time after, passing that way, he finds the carcass occupied by a swarm of bees, and takes the honey (v. 5-9). At his wedding he propounds a riddle suggested by this adventure (v. 10-14); by the aid of his wife the answer is discovered (v. 15-18). In a rage he pays the forfeit, and rushes away without consummating the marriage (v. 19-20). When his anger has cooled off he returns, to find that his bride has been given to another (15<sup>1-3</sup>). He avenges himself by letting loose foxes with fire brands tied to their tails among the grain fields of Timnath. The Philistines burn the woman and her father as the authors of the mischief (v.<sup>4-6</sup>). Samson retaliates, and takes refuge in a rocky fastness of Judah. The men of Judah deliver him bound to the Philistines, but he breaks the ropes and, with an ass's jaw-bone, slays a thousand Philistines (v.<sup>7-17</sup>). The spring in Lehi (v.<sup>18-20</sup>).

* Cf. 1. Ahialon.

† For the older literature, see Reuss, GAT, § 106. On the mythical interpretation see below, note at the end of ch. 16.

3. Samson carries off the gates of Gaza; 16<sup>1-3</sup>.—Samson visits a harlot at Gaza. The Philistines lie in wait for him, but in the middle of the night he arises, pulls up the posts of one of the city gates, and, putting gate, posts, and bar on his head, carries them off to a hill near Hebron.

4. Samson and Delilah; 16<sup>4-31</sup>.—Samson loves a woman of Sorek, named Delilah. She is bribed by the Philistines to find out the secret of his marvellous strength (v.<sup>4f</sup>). Thrice he deceives her; but at last, weary of her importunity, he tells her the truth (v.<sup>6-17</sup>). The Philistines secure and blind him, and put him to grinding at a hand-mill in prison (v.<sup>18-22</sup>). At a great feast of Dagon he is brought into the temple to gratify the multitude. With a return of his old strength, he overthrows the principal pillars which support the roof, and brings the whole temple down in ruins, perishing with the Philistines (v.<sup>23-31</sup>).

The adventures of Samson differ markedly from the exploits of the judges in the preceding chapters of the book. Ehud, Deborah and Barak, Gideon, and Jephthah were leaders, who, at the head of their tribesmen, "turned to flight the armies of the aliens," and delivered their countrymen. Samson is a solitary hero, endowed with prodigious strength, who in his own quarrel, single-handed, makes havoc among the Philistines, but in no way appears as the champion or deliverer of Israel. It is easy to see why he should have been a favourite figure of Israelite folk-story, the drastic humour of which is strongly impressed upon the narrative of his adventures; but not so easy to see what place he has in the religious pragmatism of the Deuteronomic Book of Judges, or, indeed, in what sense he can be called a judge at all. Even the external connexion with the book is of the slightest character; the familiar formulas with which the histories of the judges are introduced and concluded are here at their lowest terms (13<sup>1</sup> 15<sup>20</sup> 16<sup>81b</sup>). In the narrative itself no trace of D's hand is detected.*

The three principal stories, ch. 13, 14 f., 16, are connected by more than one link, and probably belonged to a cycle of folk-tales long before they assumed a literary form. Ch. 14 presupposes ch. 13, and the catastrophe in ch. 16 turns upon the loss of his sacred locks; cf. esp. 16<sup>17</sup> with 13<sup>5</sup>. The stories of the cycle need not all be of equal age; it is not improbable, for instance, that the tale of his birth in ch. 13 is of later origin than the rest; † but, as we have them, they are in substance and form so similar that we must attribute them to the same writer. ‡ In ch. 13 and 14 a later hand has made some additions and alterations, by which, in ch. 14 particularly, the narrative is somewhat confused, nor is the text in other parts quite intact; § but there is no evidence that the redactor had more than one original source. In 15<sup>17, 18f.</sup>, where this might be suspected, the doublet may with greater probability be referred to the folk-story itself. ||

Böhme demonstrated that the language and style of ch. 13 have a strong resemblance to J in the Hexateuch; ¶ and to this source the whole group of stories of Samson is with considerable probability ascribed by Budde.** The reasons for thinking that this is the case lie not so much in particular expressions, as in the tone and spirit of the whole narration. †† Whether from J or not, the chapters undoubtedly belong to the oldest stratum of the book. The tales themselves, which are, of course, much older than the book, are almost the only specimens of their kind that have been preserved; and they give us a glimpse of a side of old Israelite life and character which is rarely represented in the Old Testament. The scrapes into which Samson's weakness for women brought him, the way in which he turned the tables on those who thought they had got the best of him, the hard knocks he dealt the uncircumcised, and the practical jokes he played on them, must have made these stories great favourites with a story-loving race, such as all the Semites are; and the rude humour which plays through them all, no less than the entire absence of moral, proves them genuine tales of the people. What basis of fact the stories may have, is not easy to tell. The name of the hero and various traits of the story seem to invite a mythical explanation, and many attempts have been made to resolve the whole into a solar myth. Other parts of the story, however, are refractory, and can only be translated as myth by the most ingenious arbitrariness. On this question see note at the end of ch. 16.

3-7. The Messenger of Yahweh announces Samson's birth.

— The Messenger of Yahweh appears to Manoah's wife and announces the birth of a son. During pregnancy she shall abstain from wine and things unclean; for the child is to be a devotee from the womb, no razor shall ever touch his head. He shall be the first to deliver Israel from the Philistines (v.<sup>3-5</sup>). She relates the occurrence and the words of the Messenger to her husband (v.<sup>6f</sup>). — The whole scene strikingly resembles in conception and expression the visit of the Messenger of Yahweh to Gideon (6<sup>11ff</sup>), and is naturally attributed to the same author. ‡ The story has been slightly retouched in places by a later hand, but not so much changed as ch. 14. §

See DB<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 812. — And not to eat anything unclean] v.<sup>7.14</sup>. The flesh of tabooed animal kinds, carrion, and the like, is probably meant. The consecrated child must be kept in utero from defilement. The rules for the Nazirite, Nu. 6<sup>1ff</sup>, contain no special prescription on this head, which was covered by the general law (Dt. 14 Lev. 11). The Jewish doctors, observing this, make unclean here equivalent to prohibited to the Nazirite; that is, the other products of the vine, Nu. 6<sup>3ff</sup>.† — Böhme thinks that these words (and the corresponding clauses in v.<sup>7.14</sup>) are the addition of a later hand, which exaggerates the strictness of the regimen. As this is, however, not suggested by the law in Nu. 6, nor by any other example, their genuineness may with good reason be maintained. — 5. Thou art with child, and wilt bear a son] Gen. 16<sup>11</sup> (J) cf. The author prob. intended a perf. — וּמִיָּדָה לֹא יַעֲלֶה עָלָיָהּ וּמִיָּדָה לֹא יַעֲבֹר עָלָיָהּ רֹאשָׁהּ 16<sup>17</sup> ו S. 1<sup>11†</sup>; cf. Nu. 6<sup>5</sup> וּמִיָּדָה לֹא יַעֲבֹר עָלָיָהּ רֹאשָׁהּ. The etymology of מִיָּדָה (masc., n. b.!), which occurs only in the stories of Samson and Samuel, is obscure. — נָזִיר אֱלֹהִים יְהוָה v.<sup>7</sup> 16<sup>17</sup>; a religious devotee. In ordinary cases the obligation of the nazir was assumed only for a certain period, which was terminated by a sacrifice of his hair at the sanctuary, Nu. 6<sup>18</sup>. In the light of similar practices in other religions, we may with great probability infer that this sacrifice was the original content of the vow. From the moment that it was assumed, the locks were consecrated and inviolable.* They were not merely the outward sign of the wearer's devotion, but, being themselves sacred, they consecrated him, and thus brought him under certain incidental prohibitions (taboos). That he must with peculiar pains guard against pollution by contact with death, is intelligible without further explanation. The Hebrew nazir had also to abstain from wine and intoxicating drinks, and from every product of the vine (cf. Jud. 13<sup>14</sup> Am. 2<sup>11f</sup>. Nu. 6<sup>3f</sup>.); compare the abstinence imposed on priests during their service, Ez. 44<sup>21</sup> Lev. 10<sup>9</sup>. In the case of Samson and Samuel the obligation was imposed for life by the mother's consecration of the unborn child, but this is signalized as something extraordinary, rather than the oldest form of the Nazirate (Ew., al.).† Such abstinences have nothing to do with morality. The commentators who have to prove Samson a blameless judge are much embarrassed by the Philistine women. Ki. (on v.<sup>5</sup>) imagines that he must have converted them. — נִזְוִיר

In v.<sup>6</sup> we might find a motive for the variation (cf. 2 S. 14<sup>20</sup>); but this explanation would not extend to v.<sup>9</sup>. More probably the substitution is accidental, due to the influence of the adjacent איש האלהים.

8-23. The second visit of the Messenger. — The Messenger returns at Manoah's request; the woman calls her husband, and to him the Messenger repeats his former prescriptions (v.<sup>8-14</sup>). Manoah invites him to stay and eat with them, but he declines, nor will he disclose his name (v.<sup>15-18</sup>). Manoah offers a kid upon the rock; as the flame rises, the Messenger ascends in it to the sky (v.<sup>19-21</sup>). Manoah fears death, for they have seen a god, but his wife reassures him; if Yahweh had meant to destroy them, he would not have accepted their sacrifice nor shown them such a portent (v.<sup>22f</sup>). — 8. Manoah prays that the Messenger may come again and show them what they shall do about the boy that is to be born, how they shall treat him. — Manoah besought Yahweh] the somewhat unusual verb occurs in the Hexateuch only in J. — 9. And God hearkened to the words of Manoah] God twice (as in v.<sup>6</sup>), instead of Yahweh as constantly in what follows; perhaps occasioned in all cases by the preceding, man of God. There is no reason to suspect that the variation has any critical significance; see note on v.<sup>6</sup>. — 10. The woman calls her husband. — The man who came to me the other day has appeared to me] lit. on the day (on which he came). The Hebrew phrase is unusual; the versions generally render, on that day; see note. — 11. Manoah follows her to the field, and accosts the stranger, asking whether it was he who before spoke to his wife. — 12. Now, if what thou sayest comes true, how shall the boy be brought up, and what shall he do] what is the rule or regimen prescribed for him, and what shall his calling be; or, perhaps, his mode of life? — 13, 14. The Messenger does not answer Manoah's question further than to repeat his injunctions; the mother shall do exactly as she has been told; she shall not eat any product of the vine, drink wine or intoxicating drink, or eat anything unclean.

Böhme leaves to the author only the words, wine and intoxicating drink she shall not drink; the rest he regards as editorial amplification. In regard to the last clause (tabooed foods), see above on v.<sup>4</sup>. The other products of the vine are explicitly forbidden, Nu. 6<sup>3f</sup>; they are not mentioned above in v.<sup>4</sup> or v.<sup>7</sup>. The extension of the prohibition to everything that comes from the vine is no evidence of later date; the taboo doubtless from the beginning included the vine itself, as did that observed by the Rechabites,* or that imposed upon the Roman Flamen Dialis, who was not allowed even to walk under a trellised vine.† Nor is it conclusive against the genuineness of the words that they do not occur in v.<sup>4,7</sup>. It is not the author's manner to repeat himself with such notarial exactness; cf. the last clause of v.<sup>7</sup> with v.<sup>4</sup>. — 15. Let me press thee to stay, and prepare before thee a kid] pregnant expression, prepare and set before thee. Compare Gen. 18<sup>5ff</sup>, and especially the story of Gideon, 6<sup>17ff</sup>. — 16. If thou press me, I will not eat of thy meat; and if thou wilt make a burnt offering, offer it to Yahweh] the Messenger keeps up the character of a man of God (v.<sup>6</sup>). In the story of Gideon the Messenger lets him bring the food, and then converts it into an offering. In the patriarchal story, Gen. 18, Yahweh eats the meal which Abraham prepares. Compared with this, the behaviour of the Messenger of Yahweh in the stories of Gideon and Manoah seems to represent a more advanced stage of theological reflexion. We must, however, bear in mind that in Israel, as elsewhere, the intercourse of God with men was believed to have been more intimate and natural in the remote past; and need not, therefore, infer that Gen. 18 is older than Jud. 6 13. — For Manoah did not know that he was the Messenger of Yahweh] cf. Mark 9<sup>5f</sup>. This cannot be the reason for the Messenger's reply, ‡ but for Manoah's invitation v.<sup>15b</sup>. § The words would then naturally stand before v.<sup>16a</sup>, || and Böhme accordingly transposes v.<sup>16a</sup> and v.<sup>16b</sup>: Let us detain thee and prepare before thee a kid; for Manoah did not know, &c. ever, even more apposite as an explanation of Manoah's request to know the name of his visitor, v.<sup>17</sup>: What is thy name, that when thy word comes true we may honour thee; for Manoah did not know that he was the Messenger of Yahweh. And the Messenger of Yahweh replied, &c. In any case the clause is misplaced, and this dislocation suggests that it is a comment, perhaps originally a marginal gloss, rather than part of the original narrative.* — 17. What is thy name, that when thy word comes true we may honour thee] cf. v.<sup>12</sup> and 1 S. 9<sup>6</sup>: The man is held in honour; everything that he says surely comes true. Gen. 32<sup>29</sup>. The name is incomprehensible; beyond your capacity to hear and understand; cf. Ps. 139<sup>6</sup>, Knowledge is beyond my capacity; it is high above my reach. Not that the name itself is mysterious or miraculous. Böhme regards the last clause as a gloss; but in a gloss we should doubtless have a more commonplace phraseology.

The words, while Manoah and his wife were looking on, which recur in v.<sup>20</sup> and are beyond doubt original there, have probably been introduced in v.<sup>19</sup> by an accident of transcription.† The two words which remain defy every attempt to construe them grammatically. By a very slight emendation we obtain, he offered it up on the rock to Yahweh, who worketh wonderfully; ‡ cf. Ex. 15<sup>11</sup> Ps. 77<sup>14</sup>. The words would then refer, not to the portent which is described in v.<sup>20</sup>, but to the predicted birth of a son. Such a special ascription to the "wonder-working Yahweh," by which the sacrifice bore the title of the occasion, would be in entire accord with ancient religion. The words have none of the marks of a gloss; the expression is far too characteristic and too difficult.* — 20. As the flame ascended from the altar to the sky] the scene so closely resembles that in the story of Gideon (6<sup>21</sup>) that there was a strong temptation to supplement the one narrative from the other,† as is done in all detail by Josephus here. ‡ Kimchi, for example, represents the fire as coming out of the rock and devouring the offering.§ Some modern critics have suspected that something of this purport originally stood in the place of the corrupt v.<sup>19b</sup>. || But the stories, similar as they are, are nowhere exactly alike; they are variations of the same theme, such as popular story-tellers delight in, not a pedantic repetition of it. In ch. 6 Gideon brings out food to his visitor, who bids him lay it on the rock, and then himself converts it into a burnt offering: here the Messenger declines the offered food, but suggests a sacrifice, which Manoah accordingly prepares and offers on the rock (the technical word implies not merely the placing of the victim on the rock, but the burning it); there is really no room in the story for a parallel to the bringing of the fire out of the rock in ch. 6. We have no reason, therefore, to think that the text is here abridged. — The altar] twice in the verse. Studer finds in the substitution of the altar for the rock (v.<sup>19</sup>) confirmation of the suspicion which, on other grounds, he entertains of the whole verse; Böhme supposes that the altar was introduced by a later hand in the interest of liturgical correctness, and would restore in both instances, the rock. The possibility that the text has been thus altered is to be admitted (cf. 1 S. 14<sup>33f. 35</sup>); but the necessity of Böhme's emendation is not obvious. The kid was offered as a burnt offering on the rock, which therefore, whether usually or on this occasion only, served as an altar.¶ Why the author may not in the sequel have spoken of it under the latter name, I do not see. Indeed, one might perhaps discover in the very identification evidence of a primitive time. — The Messenger of Yahweh ascended in the flame of the altar] cf. the colourless interpolation in 6<sup>21</sup>, end. — 21. And the Messenger of Yahweh

did not appear again to Manoah and his wife] not, was no longer visible to them. — Then Manoah knew] when he saw him ascend in the altar flame; cf. 6<sup>22</sup>, Gideon saw that he was the Messenger of Yahweh when he brought the fire out of the rock. Böhme regards the first sentence of this verse as an editorial addition; v.<sup>21b</sup> should follow immediately upon v.<sup>20b</sup>. There is, however, no manifest motive for the interpolation, while the author may have thought it worth while to say that the Messenger, who had visited them twice, did not return again. Probably, if we had been writing the story, we should have put this sentence after v.<sup>23</sup>; but the author preferred to finish what he had to say about the Messenger at this point. The old Hebrew writers did not always have the same notions about good style that are entertained by modern critics. — 22. Manoah is greatly alarmed. — We shall surely die, for we have seen a god] 6<sup>22</sup>; see comm. there. The word, a god, conveys too much to us, but we have no other to translate it by. The Hebrew elohim is used for any superhuman being; cf. 1 S. 28<sup>13</sup>, where the witch of Endor at the sight of Samuel's ghost exclaims, "I see a god (elohim) rising from the earth." — 23. His wife reassures him. — If it had been Yahweh's pleasure to kill us, he would not have taken a burnt offering from us] the words and a meal offering are, as in v.<sup>19</sup>, probably of later insertion. By what signs the acceptance of a sacrifice was recognized, we do not know. — And would not have showed us all these things, and would not now have announced to us such a thing] the first clause refers to the appearance of the Messenger and his wonderful departure; the second to the promise of a son and the injunctions connected with it. The order may be explained by the fact that the most striking sight, the ascent of the Messenger in flame, connected itself with the sacrifice. Böhme attributes both clauses to editorial expansion. This appears to me possible as regards the first (he would not have showed us all these things); but I see no reason to doubt the genuineness of the last clause.

The Greek translators therefore read, ליהוה הַפְּלִיא לַעֲשׂוֹת, which gives a satisfactory structure and sense.  $\text{Ⲅ}^B$  (alone) καὶ ἀνῆνεγκεν . . . τῷ κυρίῳ, καὶ διεχώρισεν ποιῆσαι, which represents the text of  $\text{Ⲅ}$ , and agrees literally with  $\text{Ⲅ}$ , which here and elsewhere renders הפליא by פִּרַשׁ, Pael and Aphel. We may with some plausibility conj. that διεχώρισεν is the translation of Aquila.  $\text{Ⲅ}$  is an attempt to construe the words with the following clause, after the words וַאֲשֶׁר רָאִים were accidentally transferred to this place from the next verse. With the construction לעשות cf. Is. 29<sup>14</sup> ופלא הפליא את העם הזה הפליא ופלא לעשות 2 Chr. 26<sup>16</sup> כי הפליא להעֲשֹׂה, Joel 2<sup>26</sup> (God) עָשָׂה עִמָּכֶם הַפְּלִיא. It is a "direct causative Hiphil" (König's term), and may take an accusative (עַצֵּר Is. 28<sup>29</sup>, חֶסֶד Ps. 31<sup>22</sup>, מִקֵּץ Dt. 28<sup>59</sup> &c.), or a gerund in definition. — 20. The reading is tempting; we might conjecture that the corruption which made הִרְרֵנוּ of it led to the further amplification of the verse by the addition of what now seemed lacking, a mention of the words spoken to them. — [כֵּעַז] now, just now. καθὼς [ὁ] καιρός  $\text{Ⲅ}^{ABL}$ : lacking in  $\text{Ⲅ}^{PVMNO}$  I  $\text{Ⲅ}$ ; sub ast. §. The word is difficult, because it seems to oppose the hearing, as recent, to the seeing and the sacrifice. We might conj. כי עֵתָה (cf. 21<sup>22</sup>), but should then have to regard this as the original beginning of the apodosis of וְלֹא, and all that intervenes from וְלֹא לֵק as an editorial interpolation.

24, 25. Samson's birth and childhood. — She gave him the name Samson] no etymology or explanation of the name is suggested, nor is there any hint of its significance elsewhere in the story. It is derived from shemesh, 'sun,' and if we remember that Bethshemesh, just across the valley from Manoah's home, was sacred to the sun-god, such a name will hardly appear unnatural among these Danites. On the form of the name see note, and on the mythical interpretation, see note at the end of ch. 16. — 25. The spirit of Yahweh first stirred him up at Mahaneh Dan (Dan's Camp) between Zorah and Eshtaol] as the text now stands, we must suppose that there he first had one of those fits of demonic rage which were so terrible to his enemies. The occasion and results of this outbreak are not related. The verse cannot be the introduction to ch. 14; we should rather have to regard it as originally the introduction to a lost story of Samson's first exploit. The topographical notices, however, excite suspicion. The home, or at least the family burial-place, of Manoah was between Zorah and Eshtaol (16<sup>31</sup>); Dan's Camp, on the other hand, was at Kirjath-jearim in Judah, on the western side of that town (18<sup>12</sup>). The latter statement, which there is no reason to question, is indirectly confirmed by the name itself: whatever its origin, 'Camp of Dan' is a much more natural name for a place in Judah than for one in the midst of the Danite settlements about Zorah. This consideration weighs against the hypothesis, for which there is no support, that there were two Camps of Dan, one at Kirjath-jearim, and one between Zorah and Eshtaol.* It is possible that neither of the conflicting topographical notices in our verse is original, and that the author wrote simply, The boy grew up, and Yahweh blessed him; and the spirit of Yahweh began to stir him up, disquiet him. Upon this, ch. 14 might very well follow; cf. 14<sup>4</sup>. — On Zorah see above, on v.<sup>2</sup>; on Eshtaol, see on 16<sup>31</sup>.

Ew. (GVI. ii. p. 559) thought it possible to connect the name with שָׁם 'serve,' 'the servant' sc. of God, i.e. the Nazirite. These are all efforts of misdirected ingenuity to evade the palpable derivation from שָׁם 'sun'; ‡ cf. שָׁשִׁי Ezra 4<sup>8ff</sup>, יֵרֵחוֹ Jericho, from יָרַח 'moon,' and the Palmyrene n. pr. יֵרֵחִי (Baethgen, Beiträge, p. 162), &c. — יֵרֵחִי רוּחַ יְהוָה לִפְעָמִי Kal'; Niph., Gen. 41<sup>8</sup> Dan. 2<sup>3</sup> Ps. 77<sup>51</sup> Hithp. but a good many additions and changes have been made by later editors or scribes, which disturb the simple and natural progress of the narrative. One of the most misleading of these alterations is that which lets Manoah and his wife accompany Samson to Timnath (14<sup>5.6b</sup>), with the insertion of the words, to marry her, in v. <sup>8a</sup>; the journeyings to and fro thus become an insoluble puzzle. Confusion has also been introduced by (or in) the dates in v. <sup>14b. 15a</sup>, and toward the close of ch. 14 an accidental corruption of the text has made the sequel unintelligible.*

XIV. 1-4. Samson announces his purpose to marry a Philistine woman of Timnath. — Samson went down to Timnath] from his father's home at Zorah (13<sup>2</sup>). Timnath † is in Jos. 19<sup>43</sup> allotted to Dan; in Jos. 15<sup>10</sup> it is set down as a frontier town of Judah. According to Jud. 1<sup>34</sup>, the Danites had been thrust back from this region by the Amorites. In the Philistine invasion, Timnath fell into their possession. ‡ Early in the history of the kingdom, no doubt, it was incorporated in Judah; but, according to 2 Chr. 28<sup>18</sup>, was reconquered by the Philistines in the time of Ahaz (736-728 B.C.). It still bears the name Tibneh, and lies about an hour west of 'Ain Shems (Beth-shemesh, Har-heres, 1<sup>35</sup>), and somewhat farther southwest of Sur'ah (Zorah). § — 2. On his return he asks his father to get her for his wife. The negotiations for a bride were the business of the bridegroom's father; cf. Gen. 34<sup>4ff</sup>. — 3. His parents object to his marrying a Philistine; he should take a wife of his own people. Samson, however, persists. — His father and his mother] the last words are probably an addition to the original text (conformation to v. <sup>2</sup>); the verb in Heb. is in the singular; observe also my people, and the sing. in Samson's reply, Get (thou) her for me; it is naturally the father who answers. — Are there no women among his own kinsmen or of his own race, that he must needs go take a Philistine wife? Cf. Gen. 24<sup>3f</sup>. 26<sup>34f</sup>. 28<sup>1f. 8f</sup>. — The uncircumcised Philistines] uncircumcised is an opprobrious word which is applied almost exclusively to the Philistines

Circumcision seems to have been generally practised by the other peoples of Palestine.* On the Philistines, see on 3<sup>3</sup>.—For she suits me] v.<sup>7</sup>; lit. is right in my eyes.—4. In this seeming perversity there was a divine purpose of which his parents were not aware; cf. Gen. 24<sup>50</sup>.—For he (Yahweh) was seeking an opportunity of the Philistines] an opportunity for Samson to do them a mischief; cf. 2 K. 5<sup>7</sup>, which suggests that the rare word may have the by-sense, ‘opportunity, occasion for a fight.’—The second half-verse is superfluous here, and is very probably an editorial addition derived from 15<sup>11</sup>; † observe the generalization, over Israel (cf. 13<sup>1</sup>). Doorninck regards the whole verse as a gloss, introduced by some one who felt the need of some such explanation of the marriage of an inspired man and judge of Israel with a heathen woman. The words seem to me, however, to be perfectly natural in the context, and not to involve any such reflexion. The refusal of Samson’s father to get the woman for him as a wife in the usual way, explains how he came to contract an exogamous marriage. This was the origin of a succession of complications, in each of which Samson has an injury to requite, so that the mischief which he does the Philistines is always legitimate retaliation (cf. esp. 15<sup>3</sup>); he always has a just occasion. And it is in entire accord with the religious character of the folk-story that this is ascribed to the purpose of Yahweh.

1. בְּתַמְנָתָהּ v.<sup>2</sup>; cf. כְּרַמֵּי תַמְנָה v.<sup>5</sup>, Jos. 19<sup>48</sup>. The name of the place was doubtless תַּמְנָה, with the Canaanite fem. ending which we find in numerous names of places. † In Hebrew it appeared to be construct, and there was therefore a special tendency to replace it by the accus. תַּמְנָה. — וַיֹּאמֶר לוֹ [אָבִיו וְאָמוֹ] observe the sg. verb (cf. v.<sup>5a</sup>). The constr. is possible; but the discord in number is more prob. due to the interpolation of אָמוֹ. — . . . בֵּנֹתָּ among; cf. מִבְּנֹתָ v.<sup>1, 2</sup>; a good illustration of the way in which ב comes to its so-called partitive sense (13<sup>16</sup>), and of the difference between it and כֵּן partitive, כֵּן representing the part in the unity of the whole, כֵּן as separated from it. — אַחֵיךָ 16<sup>31</sup> 9<sup>1, 3, 18</sup>, thy kinsmen. — וּבְכָל עַמִּי ἐν παντὶ τῶ λαῶ σου GLM S; conformation to preceding. — 4. תִּאֲנֶה [the vb. Ps. 91<sup>10</sup> Prov. 12<sup>21†</sup> (Hithp.) 2 K. 5<sup>7</sup> (c. c. 5 pers.)†. The primary sense is prob. 'its time, the right time, came,' &c. (cf. Arab.). Hence חֲמָנָה 'opportunity, occasion.' The pronunciation of the noun is anomalous; cf. חֲמָנָה 9<sup>81</sup>; see Ol. § 213 a; Sta. § 262. The same word appears to have been read by the Greek translators in Prov. 18<sup>1</sup> (προφάσεις ζητεῖ); see Cappel, Crit. sacr., ii. p. 604 f., ed. Vogel and Scharfenberg.

It is not explicitly said that Manoah adhered to his position and declined to abet his son in his perverse course, but it is distinctly enough implied in v.<sup>4a</sup>, and to be inferred with certainty from v.<sup>5-7</sup>, where Samson takes the business into his own hands, as well as from the nature of the marriage which he contracts. It is evident there that he has no intention of taking his bride to his father's home, as he proposes in v.<sup>1.3</sup>; it is understood that she is to remain in her father's house.* That is, Manoah having refused to receive this Philistine daughter-in-law, Samson makes a ṣadīqa marriage in Timnath, with which, as a matter of course, his parents have nothing whatever to do.

This state of the case is partly obscured in the text before us through the insertion by a later hand of the words, and his father and mother, in v.<sup>5a</sup>, with the corresponding addition of v.<sup>6b</sup>, and of his father in v.<sup>10a</sup>, by which it is made to appear that Manoah yielded and undertook the customary negotiations for an ordinary marriage. The motive of this change was doubtless the difficulty which men in subsequent times found in conceiving that the hero, in open disregard of parental authority, contracted such a marriage among the Philistines. But, as is fortunately often the case, the editor did not carry through his alterations with sufficient thoroughness, and the resulting inconsistency and confusion betrays his hand. Thus v.<sup>7</sup> is left untouched, while his father, as the subject of v.<sup>10a</sup>, manifestly comes too late. And, apart from this, the fact that the comrades of the bridegroom (v.<sup>11</sup>) are not Samson's kinsmen and friends from Zorah, but Philistine youths, is incontrovertible evidence that the marriage was not sanctioned by his family.†

The removal of these interpolations leaves a text which is free from all difficulty, a plain and straightforward narrative. Manoah having refused his aid and consent, Samson goes by himself to

Timnath to arrange for his marriage (v.<sup>5</sup>). As he is approaching the town, a lion encounters him; the fury comes on, and he kills it with his bare hands (v.<sup>6</sup>). He goes on, and has a satisfactory interview with the woman (v.<sup>7</sup>). After some time spent in Timnath he returns to Zorah; * on his way he finds the honey in the carcase of the lion and takes some to his father and mother, without telling them where he got it (v.<sup>8f</sup>). He goes down again to Timnath for his wedding, and makes a feast according to custom, taking thirty young Philistines as comrades (v.<sup>10f</sup>). During the festivities he propounds his riddle, with a wager that they cannot answer it before the seven days of the feast are over (v.<sup>12-14a</sup>). They are unable to solve it, and appeal with threats to his bride to beguile him of his secret (v.<sup>14b, 15</sup>); she finally exhausts his patience, and he tells her (v.<sup>16f</sup>). On the last day, before he enters the bride chamber, they triumphantly declare the answer and claim the forfeit (v.<sup>18</sup>). In a rage, he rushes off, kills thirty Ashkelonites, and pays the wager; † then, without seeing his wife again, he returns to his father's house. To repair this disgrace, she is married out of hand to his best man (v.<sup>19, 20</sup>).

The story is admirably told; and the text, with the exception of the intentional changes which have been discussed, in excellent preservation.

5. Samson went down to Timnath] the chief reasons for omitting the words, and his father and his mother, have already been given; observe also that when the lion comes roaring to meet him, his parents are not with him (v.<sup>5b</sup>), and that in v.<sup>7</sup> there is no further mention of his father, precisely at the point where we should expect it if he had accompanied his son. — And he came to the vineyards] H, they came, ‡ necessitated by the introduction of his father and his mother in the preceding sentence. — A full grown young lion came roaring towards him] to explain the singular pronoun the commentators are constrained to suppose that Samson, in his eagerness, had outstripped his slower parents, § or that he had taken a by-path through the vineyards, while they interpreter. — 8. And he went back after a while] from Timnath to his father's house at Zorah. So the context imperatively requires. In v.<sup>7</sup> he visits Timnath and arranges the preliminaries of his marriage; having done so, in the interval before his wedding, he returns to his home; by the way he finds the honey in the carcase of the lion he had slain as he went down to Timnath; goes along eating it on his way to his parents' home (v.<sup>8f</sup>). The order of events is plain and natural. This order is completely deranged by the addition in our text of the words, to marry her. We have to suppose that after his visit to Timnath (v.<sup>7</sup>), Samson went home, leaving his parents at Timnath, where they are (v.<sup>9</sup>) when after a while he himself returns thither (v.<sup>8</sup>). But in v.<sup>10</sup> his father comes down, and we have therefore to assume that, after Samson's return to Timnath, Manoah went to Zorah and returned again. This succession of purposeless journeyings to and fro is not intimated in any way in the narrative itself; it is simply a complicated and improbable hypothesis necessitated by the words, to marry her, in v.<sup>8</sup>; and the clumsiness of the hypothesis is the strongest evidence that these words do not belong to the original story,* — And he turned aside to see the remains of the lion] which lay off the pathway, in the vineyards (v.<sup>5</sup>). — There was a swarm of bees in the carcase, and honey] we are to imagine the body dried up, the skin and shrivelled flesh adhering to the ribs, the belly hollow.† In a hot and dry climate this change would not take a great while; ‡ a longer time would be necessary for bees to take possession of the mummied carcase, and deposit honey. The story, however, does not represent Samson's discovery as an every-day occurrence; it is part of a wonderful history, and to be judged not by the prosaic probabilities of fact, but by the verisimilitude of the marvellous. Bochart adduces from Herodotus the story of the bees that made a hive of the scull of Onesilus, which the people of Amathus had fastened up over the city gate.§ It is not unlikely that the story of the bees in the carcase of the lion is further to be connected with the wide-spread belief of the ancients in the spontaneous generation of these insects in decaying

10-18. The wedding; Samson's riddle. — 10. He went down to the woman and made a feast there] * H and the versions: His father went down to the woman (!), and Samson made a feast. This introduction of the father here has a peculiarly absurd effect; especially after the other gloss, to marry her (v.<sup>8</sup>); see on v.<sup>5</sup> and v.<sup>8</sup>. — For so bridegrooms used to do] on such occasions. The note is manifestly added because the custom of the narrator's time was different. The difference lies not in the length of the festivities,† but in the fact that it was given by the bridegroom at the home of the bride's parents, instead of his own, which was altogether exceptional. On wedding customs see note on v.<sup>20</sup>. — 11. And he took thirty comrades, and they were with him] these comrades were Philistines (v.<sup>18</sup>), and took the place of the kinsmen and friends of the bridegroom, who in an ordinary marriage would have attended him to the bride's home, and thence conducted the couple in festive procession to his house. So the story originally ran, as we see especially from v.<sup>15b</sup>, where it is clear that they were invited guests, not special constables. Through misunderstanding, or possibly to remove offence, this has been so changed that the Philistines themselves select these comrades; and a motive for this unusual course is discovered in their apprehension that Samson might be up to some mischief. Thus has arisen the present text, which runs in H: And when they saw him, they took thirty comrades; saw what a dangerous-looking fellow he was. Many Greek manuscripts, representing a slightly different pronunciation of the Hebrew word, since they feared him; see crit. note. — 12. As everywhere in the world, the wedding festivities were enlivened by various pleasantries and plays of wit.‡ Samson gives out a riddle, with a wager that the guests cannot answer it before the week is out. — If you can tell me what it is, during the seven days of the feast,§ and find it out, I will give you, &c.] the words, and find it out (yourselves), which are lacking in several recensions of G, are a gloss taken from v.<sup>18</sup>, as the inappropriate position of the words in H also shows.* The author of the gloss desired an express proviso against such unfair means as the Philistines took to learn the secret. — Thirty fine linen wrappers and thirty gala dresses] one for each of the comrades. The linen wrappers (Is. 3<sup>23</sup> Prov. 31<sup>24</sup>) were not undergarments,† but rectangular pieces of fine, thin, and therefore costly, linen stuff, which might be worn as an outer garment over the other dress, or as a night-wrapper upon the naked body; ‡ see note. — Gala dresses] apparel which was worn on festival or ceremonial occasions, instead of the every-day raiment (v. 13. 19 Gen. 45<sup>22</sup> 2 K. 5<sup>5</sup>). — 13. If they are unable to guess the riddle, they shall pay the same wager. They accept the conditions: Propound thy riddle, and let us hear it! — 14. Out of the eater came something to eat, and out of the strong came something sweet] the adjectives in the second member are descriptive epithets, respectively, of the substantives in the first, which they replace in poetic parallelism. It is unnecessary, therefore, to try to make out a perfect antithesis between the adjectives independently; § there is in reality but one antithesis, not two. — They could not tell the riddle] it was, in truth, a very bad riddle, and quite insoluble without a knowledge of the accidental circumstance which suggested it. The following dates are evidently not in order. According to H, they could not make out the riddle for three days, and on the seventh day appealed to Samson's bride to learn the answer for them. || G¶ and S have in v. 15, the fourth day, instead of the seventh, which agrees better with v. 14.** It does not appear, however, why they should give up in the middle of the week. It is more probable that the error lies in the other number, and that in v. 14 we should restore, for six days.†† The story would then run naturally: They cudgel their brains in vain for six days; on the seventh and last day, in despair of the solution, they try Samson's wife. Their vehemence in v. 15 is better motivated if the time is rapidly drawing to a close than if they addressed themselves to her several days sooner. A new difficulty meets us, however, in v.<sup>17</sup>, where we read that the woman wept upon him the whole seven days that they had the feast; and on the seventh day, tired of her incessant badgering, he gave in, and told her the answer. If the companions first appealed to her on the seventh day (v.<sup>15</sup> H), or even on the fourth day (GS), her weeping seems to begin prematurely on the first day.* Some commentators explain that she had teased him for the first six days merely out of her own curiosity, and that on the seventh her importunity was redoubled by the threats of her countrymen.† If this had been the meaning of the writer, the order of the narrative or the construction of v.<sup>16a</sup> would in all probability have been different; as it is, nothing of the kind is intimated in the text. The dates in v.<sup>14.15</sup> are therefore, even after their internal contradiction is removed by the emendation six, irreconcilable with those in v.<sup>17</sup>; one or the other must be interpolated. The words in v.<sup>17</sup> do not read like a gloss, and the removal of them leaves a rather awkward sentence; the omission of the numbers in v.<sup>14</sup> and v.<sup>15</sup>, on the contrary, makes no break, and Stade rightly rejects them. According to the original story, then, the Philistines gave up the riddle right away, thinking it an easier and surer way to win the wager, to learn the answer from Samson himself through their countrywoman. For six days he is obdurate to her persuasions and tears, but at last can bear it no longer and discloses the secret. The interpolation in v.<sup>14.15</sup> may have been due to the feeling that the Philistines would not give up so easily.—15. So remote a place, and a large fortified city besides, hardly agrees with the general impression we receive from the context, that Samson rushed off from the feast in a rage, surprised some neighbouring Philistine village and slew the inhabitants, returned to Timnath with the spoil, paid his wager, and was away to his father's home before the fit was over. Now, there is a Khirbet 'Asqalūn little more than an hour south of Timnath,§ and if the half-verse were genuine, we should be strongly inclined to think that in the original story this, and not Askelon on the coast, was the scene of Samson's exploit. We need not, in such a narrative, nicely weigh the probabilities of his finding among the spoil precisely the articles he had wagered. || Stade has given good reason, however, for regarding the entire half-verse as an addition to the narrative, made by an editor who thought it unworthy of Samson to run away without paying the wager which he had lost, even though the Philistines had won unfairly. In the original story, v.<sup>19b</sup> followed immediately upon v.<sup>18</sup>; Samson, in a passion, returned to his father's house. That v.<sup>19a</sup> is secondary is evident from the fact that the slaughter of the Philistines at Ashkelon has no consequences in the story, in which everything else is so closely knit in the nexus of cause and effect.¶ These considerations, especially the last, seem to me decisive. — He was angry, and went up to his father's house] angry at the way in which he had been treated by his companions, and especially at the perfidy of his wife, which he resents by deserting her. Stade infers from v.<sup>18</sup>, before he entered the bride-chamber, that the marriage had not been consummated.* They held back, as has been said, to the last moment, and just as he was on the point of entering the chamber, they give their answer: What is sweeter than honey, and what is fiercer than a lion? Instantly seeing through the plot and upbraiding them for it, he rushes out of the house, and away to Zorah. In thus mocking her he inflicted on her the keenest disgrace, and made her and her family a laughing-stock. The case of חֶמְתָּה v.<sup>5</sup> is entirely different (see there), and the instances in late poetry where the ending ā is due to the striving after more sonorous forms, or blundering archaism, do not make the occurrence of the form here any easier to explain. Stade's emendation, הַחֶרֶס (15<sup>1</sup>), is one of those comparatively rare conjectures which are self-evident when once they have been hit upon. — לֹא הִרְשַׁם בְּעֹגְלֹתֵי GL εἰ μὴ κατεδάμασάτε τὴν δάμαλιν μου,‡ probably for the sake of the paronomasia. § — 20. לִסְרֵעָוָה אִשֶּׁר רָעָה לוֹ] the verb (only here) is apparently denominative from רָע. — On marriage and wedding customs see WRSmith, Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia, 1885; Wellhausen, Die

XV. 1-8. Samson burns the Philistines' grain fields.—When Samson's anger cools, he goes down to Timnath to visit his wife, but finds that she has been given to another. To revenge himself, he turns loose three hundred foxes with firebrands tied to their tails, and sets fire to the grain in the fields. interpreters, reflecting that the solitary habits of the fox would make it very difficult to catch such a number, and that Samson's great strength would be of no avail in such an undertaking, suppose that the author meant jackals, which roam in packs, and could easily, it is said, be caught by the hundred.* That the Hebrew name may have included jackals as well as foxes is quite possible; the Arabs are said in some places to confound the jackal with the fox,† and in the modern Egyptian dialect the classical name of the fox is given exclusively to the jackal.‡ The decision of the question is of importance only to those who take the story as a veracious account of an actual occurrence. They should consider, however, whether the author would thank them for their attempts to make Samson's wonderful performance easy. — Having caught his foxes, Samson turned them tail to tail, and put a torch, that is, a stick of wood wrapped with some absorbent material and saturated with oil,§ between each pair of tails. — 5. In Judah the Danite Samson was a stranger, who had no claim to the protection of the tribe. The conduct of Judah appears to us pusillanimous, but there is no sign that the author of the chapter, who was probably himself a Judæan, took such a view of it. He probably thought only of the opportunity which was thus given Samson to make havoc among the uncircumcised.—Three thousand men] a flattering estimate of Samson's prowess.—They upbraid him for having given this provocation to their Philistine masters; What did he mean by doing such a thing? There was a Maktesh in Jerusalem also (Zeph. 1<sup>11</sup>), doubtless so called from its configuration. He drank of the water thus miraculously given, and his strength revived. The name of the spring perpetuated the memory of his cry and God’s answer. — En ha-qōrē] interpreted by the author, Spring of the Caller, i.e. the man who called to God in his need. In reality, ‘the caller’ (qōrē) is the Hebrew name of the partridge (1 S. 26<sup>30</sup> Jer. 17<sup>11</sup>), and the original significance of the name was doubtless, Partridge Spring. § — Which is at Lehi to this day] a witness to the fact; cf. 1 S. 6<sup>18</sup>: the great stone on which they set down the ark is a witness to this day, in the field of Joshua the Beth-

So numerous Fathers, some of the Rabbis who discuss the question in Beresh. rabba, § 98; Ra., Bochart, Grot. Others interpret, molar tooth; so ῥεχνλ. m. ven. 1 (כנא) Σ L.‡ Accordingly Bochart, Grotius, and others suppose that after having once thrown the jaw away he picked it up again and drank from it. But that this is not the author's meaning is clear from the fact that he says that the spring was to be seen at Lehi to this day. See esp. Clericus, who refutes Bochart at length, and quotes on his side Ussher, Arias Mont., Castell, Schm., al. Lehi was probably so called from some real or fancied resemblance to the jaw of an animal; comp. the peninsula ὄρου γνάθος in Laconia, just within Malea, Strabo, viii. 5, 2, p. 363 (Steinthal, We.).§ What the point of resemblance was it is idle for us to imagine. In the hillside or at its base was a round depression, called from its shape Maktesh, Mortar, and in this was En ha-qōrē, the Partridge Spring. In these verses we have, therefore, a very good example of the variety of aetiological legend which grows out of the explanation of names of places by popular etymology.|| Ramath-lehi is the place where Samson threw away the jawbone; Maktesh, a hollow which God made to reach water to quench Samson's thirst; while En ha-qōrē is the spring which burst forth in response to his call. We may safely go a step further, and apply the same explanation to the whole story of the slaughter of the Philistines; בלי in Hebrew may be understood either at Lehi or with a jawbone. The story has

Modern attempts to identify Lehi have thus far led to nothing. Van de Velde's Tell el-Lekiyeh, 4 m. N. of Beersheba, is far too remote (see on v.<sup>8</sup>); Guérin's Khirbet 'Ain el-Lehi, NW. of Bethlehem (Judée, ii. p. 396 ff.), is unverified, and is also too far away; on Khirbet eş-Siyyagh see above, p. 344. Conder finds an 'Ayūn Qāra, NW. of Zorah (Tent Work, i. p. 277); the name does not appear in the Name Lists of the Survey. See DB<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 939; Ri. HWB<sup>1</sup>. p. 898.

XVI. 1-3. Samson carries off the gates of Gaza. — Samson visits Gaza and lodges with a harlot. The Philistines learn of his presence, and lay their plans to kill him in the morning. He rises in the middle of the night, pulls up the gate-posts, and carries off the city-gates to a hill near Hebron. — The story is of the same character with the rest of the cycle, and doubtless of the same origin. In v.<sup>2</sup> a later hand appears to have exaggerated the precautions taken by the Philistines, from which some confusion results.

1. Gaza] the most southern city of Palestine on the coast and on the land route to Egypt through the desert. Its position made it, from the earliest times, a place of great commercial and military importance; its name is found in the Egyptian lists from the time of Thothmes III.,* long before the Philistine invasion, as well as in the Amarna tablets; and it is still a thriving city of 16,000 inhabitants.† — A harlot] Jos. 2<sup>1</sup> Gen. 38<sup>15</sup> &c. — 2. It was told the Gazaites, Samson is come hither] the first verb has accidentally dropped out of ~~the~~. The rest of the verse is hard to understand. If the Philistines were lying in wait for him at the gate of the city, it is not easy to conceive how Samson could pull up and carry off the gates unmolested; if the author imagined that the guards were asleep, ‡ he could hardly have failed to give us some intimation, — and what sound sleepers they must have been! Studer would omit the words all night in v.<sup>a</sup>, § and suppose that they lay in wait for him at the gates all day, but when the gates were closed at night, feeling sure that he could not escape, withdrew until morning. But if this had been the author's meaning, he would have written all day, or, until the gates were closed, or, until sunset (when every one would understand that the gates were shut, cf. Jos. 2<sup>5</sup>). I suspect that the whole of v.<sup>ab</sup> is a later addition, intended to make Samson's escape the more wonderful by exaggerating the precautions which the Philistines took to prevent it. A less radical, but at the same time less probable, conjecture would be that the author wrote, They surrounded the house, and lay in wait for him all night long; supposing that in the darkness Samson slipped through their lines. — They kept quiet all night, saying, When morning dawns we will kill him] they had no reason to think that he would try to leave the place by night, or that he could get out, after the gates were closed, even if he attempted it; so they did nothing, confident that in the morning they would be able to find and kill him. The half-verse seems to me to exclude v.<sup>ab</sup>, with its contradictory representation that they lay in wait for him all night at the gate. — 3. In the middle of the night he arose, and made his way through the deserted streets to the city gate. — And laid hold of the doors of the city gate and the two gate-posts, and pulled them up, together with the bar] the two leaves of the gate were not hinged to the gate-posts, but turned on pins moving in sockets in the sill and lintel. The bar was let into the two posts, and secured by some kind of a lock.* Samson pulled the posts out of the ground, and carried off in one piece the doors and the whole framework. — And put them on his shoulders, and carried them up to the top of the hill that faces Hebron] the distance from Gaza to Hebron cannot be far from forty miles. A late Latin tradition, of which the inhabitants of the city are said to know nothing,† fixes the place where Samson deposited the gates of Gaza at El-Muntār, ‡ a hill SE. of Gaza, and only a quarter of an hour outside the walls, § and this site is adopted, against the plain text, by some recent commentators, who are inclined to reduce as much as possible the wonderful character of Samson's feats.* It is possible, as Bertheau suggests, that some natural formation on a hill near Hebron may have been called the "Gates of Gaza," and that the story thus had an origin similar to those in the preceding chapter (Lehi); but it is clear that the narrator was not aware of any such local connexion in this case, and the hypothesis is neither necessary nor probable.

This connects the story with the close of the preceding (15<sup>19</sup>); from the scene of his exploit at Lehi he went to Gaza. No one would be likely to make such a connexion across 15<sup>20</sup>, while after that verse the somewhat awkward particle would easily be dropped. The  $\epsilon \kappa \epsilon \acute{\iota} \theta \epsilon \nu$  (משם) is therefore probably original. — 2. In  $\mathfrak{U}$  the principal verb is left to be understood from the preceding; with the aposiopesis cf. esp. 1 S. 1<sup>22</sup>. The question may be raised whether the cons. pf. וְהַרְגָּהוּ is to be taken as belonging to the clause of עַד (till the morning dawns and we kill him), or as the apodosis of that clause (wait till the morning dawns, and then we will kill him). Cf. Jos. 1<sup>15</sup> 6<sup>10</sup> Gen. 29<sup>6</sup> 1 S. 1<sup>22</sup> 2 S. 10<sup>6</sup>; Dr<sup>3</sup>, p. 135 Obs., thinks that in these instances the general structure of the sentence favours the former alternative, and that if the latter were true we might expect rather וְאַחֲרָיִם with impf. (Jos. 2<sup>16</sup>).† It must be borne in mind, however, that the consec. pf. in these cases is not grammatically subordinate, but co-ordinate. The structure is precisely the same in Jud. 6<sup>18</sup> 1 S. 10<sup>8</sup> 14<sup>24</sup> Gen. 27<sup>45</sup>, where the pf. psychologically belongs to the time clause, as in Ex. 33<sup>22f</sup>. Jos. 6<sup>10</sup>, where it psychologically belongs to the main sentence. The Hebrew only says: Expectabis donec veniam ad te et ostendam tibi quid facias (1 S. 10<sup>8</sup>); et protegam dextera mea donec transeam et tollam manum meam et videbis posteriora mea (Ex. 33<sup>22f</sup>). This indifference of construction represents a certain looseness of conception; the question which our more logical apparatus of particles and tenses compels us in translating to answer in one way or the other can hardly have occurred to the writer and his readers at all. Only in cases where some emphasis was thrown on the temporal relation of the following verb do we find it introduced by אִם or אַחֲרָיִם. — 3. [וַיִּתְחַרְשׁוּ בְרִלְחוֹתָיו] this verb is pronounced by  $\mathfrak{M}$  as primae gutturalis also 1 K. 6<sup>10</sup> Eccl. 7<sup>18f</sup>; elsewhere

4-22. Samson and Delilah. — Samson again falls in love with a Philistine woman, in the valley of Sorek. She is bribed by the rulers to discover the secret of his perilous might. Three times he deceives her, but at last, tired of her incessant importunity, reveals the truth. While he sleeps in her lap, his locks are shaved off; when he awakes his strength has left him. His enemies bind him and put out his eyes; he is led off to Gaza, and set to grind at the mill in prison. — 4. Afterwards] loose connexion; 2 S. 2<sup>1</sup> 8<sup>1</sup> &c. — The valley of Sorek] Jerome notes a village, Cafarsorek, in the region of Eleutheropolis, near Saraa (Zorah), Samson's home.* The English survey found ruins of Sūrīk, three-quarters of an hour west of Šur'ah (Zorah), on the north side of Wady Šurār.† The valley of Sorek was probably this great Wady, whose fertility is remarked by modern travellers.‡ Sorek is in Hebrew the specific name of a choice variety of grape (Is. 5<sup>2</sup> Jer. 2<sup>21</sup> Gen. 49<sup>11</sup>), from which the valley may well have received its name; cf. the valley of Eshcol (grape cluster) near Hebron (Nu. 13<sup>23f</sup>). — Whose name was Delilah] the current etymological interpretations of the name, languishing, love-lorn, or delicate, § are ludicrously inapt. — 5. The tyrants of the Philistines] see on 3<sup>3</sup>. — Beguile him] 14<sup>15</sup>. — And find out by what means his strength is great, and by what means we may be able to cope with him, that we may secure him to torment him] not, wherein his great strength lies,* which destroys the correspondence between the two clauses, and is grammatically inexact.† They imagine that this strength depends upon some secret means which he employs, some charm or amulet.‡ And we will each give thee eleven hundred shekels of silver] probably each of the five Philistine rulers (3<sup>3</sup>). The number eleven hundred is a somewhat singular one (cf. 17<sup>2</sup>); Reuss suggests that it may mean, over a thousand. The intrinsic value of the shekel is about sixty cents; the sum offered is meant to seem enormous.

6-9. The first trial; the seven bowstrings.—6. Delilah sets about the task, and asks Samson what makes him so strong, and with what he could be bound to torment him.—7. If they should bind me with seven green bowstrings which have not been dried, my strength would fail, and I should be like any other man] seven, the charmed number. Bowstrings, cords made from the intestines of animals are probably meant. They were to be green, in which state they were less likely to fray or break than when they had been dried, while at the same time the knots would set much more firmly.—8. The Philistine princes furnish her with such cords, which she would not have at hand in the house, and she binds him with them. We may imagine that this was done as if in sport, or while he slept, as in v.<sup>14, 19</sup>.—9. And she had the liers in wait ready in the inner room] to seize Samson if the experiment succeeded. As it is presumed in the following trials that Samson was not aware of the presence of these men, we have to suppose that they did not rush out of their concealment at Delilah's signal, but waited to see whether the cords held or not.—The Philistines are upon thee, Samson! And he snapped the bowstrings as a strand of tow snaps when it comes near the fire] lit. scents the fire; without actual contact; cf. ### 13, 14. The third trial; weaving his locks in the loom. —

She again upbraids him for the deception he has practised on her; he tells her that if his hair were woven into the web his strength would leave him. — In Ⲙ there is a lacuna between v.<sup>13</sup> and v.<sup>14</sup>, as may be clearly seen in RV.: "And he said unto her, If thou weavest the seven locks of my head with the web. <sup>14</sup> And she fastened it with the pin, and said," &c. The end of what Samson said and the beginning of what Delilah did are lacking; cf. v.<sup>7-9</sup>. 11f. 17-19. The Greek versions enable us to restore the original text. The difficulties which remain are due to our imperfect acquaintance with the structure of the loom and the process of weaving. In particular, an error about the nature and use of the pin early led to misinterpretation, and that to glosses in both Ⲙ and the versions. It was not a nail or peg, driven into the wall (Ⲅ) or the ground (L), or stuck in the cloth-beam of the loom to keep it from unrolling,* but a pointed piece of wood corresponding to the σπάθη of the Greek weaver, which was used to “beat up” the woof in the chain, in order to make its threads lie close together and form a firm texture.† We restore and translate, accordingly:

13. . . . If thou weave the seven braids of my head along with the web, and beat up with the pin, my strength will fail and I shall be like any other man. 14. So while he was asleep Delilah took the seven braids of his head, and wove them into the web, and beat up with the pin, &c. ‡ We are to imagine the simplest kind of an upright loom, § in which an unfinished piece of stuff was standing. While Samson sleeps on the ground with his head close to the loom, || Delilah weaves his long hair into the warp with her fingers, and beats it up tight and hard. He was thus most securely fastened, in a prostrate position, to the frame of the loom, the posts of which were firmly planted in the earth. — And she said, The Philistines are upon thee, Samson! And he awoke from his sleep, and pulled up the loom and the web] as he sprang up, he pulled the posts of the loom out of the ground by the hair of his head, which was fast in the web. The same misunderstanding which has given rise to glosses in G and L in the first half-verse has here led to the insertion in H of the words, the pin, before the loom, which betrays that it is a gloss by its ungrammatical construction.

13. אח שבע מחלפות ראשי ] the braids in which his long unruly locks were plaited to keep them out of the way; cf. v. 19. Stud. remarks that πλόκαμος is frequently employed of consecrated locks, e.g. Aesch., Choeph. 6; Eurip., Bacch. 494; cf. also Pollux, ii. § 30. See Spencer, De legibus rit., iii. diss. i. c. 6, § 1. — Of the words which have accidentally fallen out of H we have two Greek versions. One of these is represented by B: ¶ ἐὰν ὑπάνης τὰς

The translation given in the text follows the former of these two versions, which represents in Hebrew: חתרגי את שבע מחלות ראשי עם המסכת | ותקעך ביתך וחליתי והייתי כאחד האדם: ויהי בשכנתי והקח רלילה את שבע מחלות ראשו וחארג במסכת וגו'. The words were dropped by a scribe who skipped from ביתך in v.<sup>13</sup> to the same word in v.<sup>14</sup>. Similarly Houbigant, Be., Doorn.; Moore, PAOS. ### 23-25. The Philistines celebrate their triumph at Gaza. —

23. The rulers of the five Philistine cantons (3<sup>3</sup>) assemble at Gaza to offer a great sacrifice to their god, Dagon. Dagon was worshipped by all the Philistines; * we hardly know enough about their religion, however, to affirm that he was their national god, in the sense in which Chemosh, for example, was the god of Moab. Of the character and worship of Dagon we know only what is to be gathered from the passage before us and from 1 S. 5. According to Philo Byblius, who gives him a place in his Phoenician theogony, he was a god of agriculture, Ζεὺς ἀρόργιος; but this is probably only an etymological interpretation of the name. Another etymology derives the name from the Hebrew dag, 'fish.' Since David Kimchi (died about 1235 A.D.), it has been the common opinion that the idol of Dagon spoken of in 1 S. 5<sup>4</sup> had the form of a man from the waist up, while below the waist it was in the likeness of a fish; but this theory is probably no more than an ingenious attempt to explain the corrupt text of 1 S. 5<sup>4</sup> by the aid of etymology; see crit. note. — And for festivities] lit. for rejoicing. Their rejoicing before the god was the demonstrative expression of their gratitude (cf. Dt. 12<sup>12, 18</sup> 16<sup>11</sup> 27<sup>7</sup> Lev. 23<sup>40</sup> Neh. 8<sup>10-12</sup>). It is going quite beyond the evidence, however, to infer from this celebration, as some scholars are inclined to do, that the worship of Dagon had always a joyous and festive character. — Our god has given Samson, our enemy, into our power] just as the Israelites would have said under like circumstances; cf. 11<sup>21</sup> Dt. 3<sup>3</sup>, Mesha's inscription, l. 14 f., 19, 32, &c. — 24. When the people

23. There was a Beth-dagon in the Judean Lowland (Jos. 15<sup>41</sup>), and another on the boundary of Asher, probably in the coast plain south of Carmel (Jos. 19<sup>27</sup>). An inscription of Sennacherib mentions a Bīt-daganna in the vicinity of Joppa (Prism Inscr. ii. 60); Eusebius locates a village named Kefar-dagon between Diospolis and Jamnia, now Daḡūn (PEF. Qu. St., 1874, p. 279). A Beit Deḡan exists also SE. of Nābulus (Rob., BE<sup>2</sup>, ii. p. 232, 280). It is possible that some echo of the description which classic authors give of Derceto, worshipped on the same coast, may have reached Kimchi's ears; not a few more modern scholars have identified Dagon with Derceto. Kimchi's representation of Dagon as half man, half fish, is not derived from Jewish tradition; neither the ancient versions, Jerome, nor the Talmud, know anything of such a figure. Rashi describes the image as a fish; RLbG. as a man; Abarb. as fish from the waist up, but with hands and feet like a man. The combination of Dagon with the man-fish Ὠδάκων of Berossus or is led into the interior, perhaps in order that the magnates gathered in it may have a nearer view of him. He grasps the two middle columns, and by dislodging them brings down the whole edifice in ruins. No little ingenuity has been expended in the effort to conceive a method of architectural construction by which this might be made to seem possible.* There is some reason in the text itself to suspect that the three thousand men and women on the roof† are an addition to the original narrative, exaggerating the catastrophe. If that be the case, the author may have represented the Philistine aristocracy assembled in the banqueting hall of the temple,‡ the roof of which can very well be imagined to have been supported on a pair of central pillars. Such a construction was suggested by J. B. Wideburg: ‡ potuerunt . . . quatuor trabes primariae, quibus reliquae minores insertae binis columnis in medio erectis imponi, quo facto, subtractisque deinceps columnis, necesse fuit trabes quoque impositas labi, quarum lapsum mox totius aedificii ruina consequi debuit.

Others, through a misapprehension of the context, interpret, “the . . . columns on which the house was supported and on which it rested,” which is mere tautology. — 30. Let me die myself with the Philistines] lit. let my soul die. The soul is not in the Old Testament, as it is in our thought, the immortal in man. It is the breath-like something (nefesh, cf. ψυχή) which goes out and vanishes when he dies. There is nowhere a suggestion that the soul survives the man whose life it was; the inhabitants of the nether-world (sheol) are not souls but shades (refa'im, εἰδωλα). — He thrust with all his might] we are probably to imagine that, standing between the two columns, he pushed them apart by extending his arms.¶ Others render, bowed, supposing that he put his arms around the columns and, bearing forward, carried

Mythical interpretations of the story of Samson. — The similarity, in several particulars, between the story of Samson and that of Herakles was early noticed; see Euseb., chron. canon, ed. Schoene, ii. p. 54 (some compare his deeds with those of Herakles); Philastr., de haeres., c. 8; Georg. Syncellus, chronogr., ed. Dindorf, i. p. 309 (κατὰ τοὺτους τοὺς χρόνους Σαμψὼν ἦν, ὁ παρ' Ἑλλήσι βοώμενος Ἡρακλῆς).* Many modern writers have made the same comparison, and inferred that Samson is the Hebrew counterpart of the Phoenician Melqart, the Greek Herakles; and that the story of his deeds was either originally a cognate myth, or has taken up numerous mythical elements. See G. L. Bauer, Hebräische Mythologie, 1802, ii. p. 86 ff.; ° G. Kaiser, Comm. in priora Geneseos capita, 1829, p. 186 ff.; Brockhausen, "Simson als Baal-Herakles," *Annalen d. Sonntag, Der Richter Simson; ein historisch-mythischer Versuch, 1890. — The older writers contented themselves with drawing out the parallels to the Herakles myth: † each begins his career of adventure by strangling a lion; each perishes at last through the machinations of a woman; ‡ each chooses his own death. Samson's fox-catching is compared with the capture of the Erymanthian boar, the Cretan bull, the hind of Artemis; the spring which is opened at Lehi to quench his thirst, with the warm baths which Sicilian nymphs open to refresh the weary Herakles; § the carrying off of the gates of Gaza reminds some of the setting up of the Pillars of Hercules, || others of Herakles's descent to the nether-world. ¶ Meier and Ewald even discover that Samson has exactly twelve labours, like Herakles (in late systems). Steinthal not only identifies Samson with Melqart-Herakles, but attempts to explain the whole story as a solar myth, by a thorough-going application of the method which Max Müller and his school introduced in Aryan mythology. He is followed in the main by Goldziher, Seinecke, and Jul. Braun (Naturgesch. der Sage, 1864, i. p. 272,

442°)* Wietzke identifies Samson with the "Egyptian Herakles," Horus-Ra. The Philistine women all represent Sheol—"Tafenet"; the Philistines, with whom he is in perpetual strife, are the children of Set-Typhon. The tale of Samson follows the Sun-god through the year; Spring (ch. 14), Summer (15<sup>1-8a</sup>), Autumn and Winter (15<sup>8b-19</sup>); ch. 16 is his descent to the world below; he breaks the gates of Hades (16<sup>1-3</sup>); bound by Delilah, he loses his eyes and his strength, but his might returns and he triumphs as a god over his foes (16<sup>4-30</sup>). — The name שמשון is derived from שמש, 'sun' (see above, p. 326); Steinthal and others compare it with רגון from רג, 'fish,' but the formation is too frequent to allow us to attach any significance to this coincidence, even were the latter etymology more certain than it is. That שמשון is equivalent to שמש is not probable, nor is the explanation which would make it a diminutive acceptable; it might mean "sun-worshipper," † a name which would not be strange in the vicinity of Beth-shemesh (above, p. 325). ‡ A legend whose hero bore such a name would attract and absorb elements of an originally mythical character, such as the foxes in the corn-fields perhaps represent; § but if this be true, all consciousness of the origin and significance of the tale had been lost, and the mythical traits commingle freely with those which belong to folk-story. This explanation is at least as natural as the alternative, that an original solar myth has been transformed into heroic legend, with the admixture of a large non-mythical element. The historical character of the adventures of Samson may be given up without denying the possibility, or even probability, that the legend, which is very old, has its roots in the earth, not in the sky. ||

as his priest (17<sup>1-13</sup>). The Danites, who have hitherto been unable to get any permanent possession in Canaan, send from their seats in the southwest a party to explore the land. Passing through the Highlands of Ephraim, the scouts halt at Micah's house and consult his oracle (18<sup>1-6</sup>). Receiving a favourable response, they go on, and find Laish, at the sources of the Jordan, inviting attack by its isolated situation and the unguarded security of its people (v. 7-10). On their representations, a considerable part of the tribe, numbering six hundred fighting men, migrates to the north, carrying off as they go Micah's image and his priest (v. 11-26). They capture Laish, put its inhabitants to the sword, and settle there, giving it the name of their own tribe, Dan (v. 27-29). They set up Micah's image in the holy place, where it remained to later times, ministered to by a priesthood which was reputed to be descended from Moses (v. 30<sup>ff</sup>).

The narrative is not all from one hand. The inventory of Micah's idols, ephōd, teraphim, pesel, massekah, in various permutations, is confusing.* The origin of the last two is related in 17<sup>2-4</sup>; that of the other two is apparently independent (v. 5). Micah's priest is a wandering Levite from Bethlehem, whom he hires to make his home with him (v. 8-11a); while in v. 7 he is a young Levite who was living in the neighbourhood (cf. 18<sup>15</sup>).† In the account of the sending out of the Danite spies (18<sup>2</sup>) there is a manifest plethora, as there is also in v. 7 and in v. 8-10; in the verses which describe the robbery of Micah's sanctuary (v. 13-21) we find not only redundancy but conflicting representations, and the confusion resulting from the attempt to combine them has been increased by various glosses. Finally, the two statements concerning the duration of the cultus at Dan (v. 30. 31) cannot both come from the same source.

Oort, ‡ Wellhausen, § and Kuenen || explain these phenomena as the result of somewhat extensive interpolations, the disorder occasioned by these being aggravated, as is often the case, by corruption of the text and secondary glosses. The motive of the interpolations was to throw contempt upon the sanctuary at Dan; its famous image of Yahweh was made of stolen silver, to which a curse clung (17<sup>2-4</sup>). Vatke* and Bertheau† recognized two narratives united by a redactor, and attempted to separate them; Budde‡ offers a continuous analysis of ch. 17, 18. The two narratives originally resembled each other very closely, and considerable uncertainty must exist in the details of the analysis, but the composite character of the chapters appears to me sufficiently established.

Vatke's analysis is based upon the erroneous assumption that only one Levite is mentioned in the chapters. The Danites carried off Micah's son, Jonathan, who was of the tribe of Manasseh (18<sup>30</sup> cf. 17<sup>1</sup>). In the other narrative the Levite is also carried off, but disappears in the sequel. Bertheau ascribes to one account, 18<sup>13. 15. 17*</sup> (the priest was standing at the gate) v. 18b-20. 26a. 27b-29; to the other, 18<sup>14. 16. 17*. 18a. 21-25. 26b. 27a</sup>. In the former the priest is persuaded to accompany the Danites, and himself bears off the sacra; in the other, he is carried off by force. The inconsistency of this analysis is shown by Kue. (L.c.). Budde reconstructs the two accounts as follows: I. 17<sup>1. 5. 8-11a. 12aα. 13</sup> 18<sup>1b. 2*. 3*. 4b*. 5. 6a. 8*. 9*. 10*. 11*. 12. 13*. 15*. 17*. 18*. 19-29. 31</sup>. II. 17<sup>2a. 3bβ. 4a. 2b. 3bα. 4b. 7. 12b. 11b. 12aβ</sup> 18<sup>1b. 2*. 3*. 4a. 6b. 7*. 8*. 9*. 10*. 11*. 13*. 14. 17*. 15*. 18*. . . . 30</sup>. Similarly Kittel (GdH. i. 2. p. 19; cf. also Kittel's analysis in Kautzsch, Das Alte Test.): I. 17<sup>1. 5 . . . 8-11a. 12aα. 13</sup> 18<sup>1b. 2aα. 2b. 3b-7*. 8-10aα. 10b-14*. 15*. 16*. 17*. 18a*. 18b-29 (31?)</sup>. II. 17<sup>2-4. 6f. 11b. 12aβ. b</sup> 18<sup>1a (2aβ?) . 3a. 7*. 10aβ</sup>, parts of v. 14-18. 20 (30?). — In nearly all the places where the text is redundant and confused it is possible to disengage two strands of narrative; but to which of the two sources they should be attributed, there are in many instances no criteria to determine; every attempt at a reconstruction in detail must at best be one of several possibilities. The first of the two narratives ran somewhat as follows: A man of Mt. Ephraim, Micah by name, had a shrine (בית אלילים) containing an ephōd and teraphim, and consecrated one of his sons as priest (17<sup>1. 5</sup>). Afterwards, a wandering Levite from Bethlehem in Judah, in search of employment, came that way, and was hired by Micah, who installed him in the place of his son, rejoicing that he had now a regular priest (v. 8-10. 11a. 12b. 13). The Danites, who have as yet made no permanent settlement, send out an exploring party (18<sup>1. 2a*</sup>). They come to Micah's house, and pass the night there (v. 2b). (They fall in with his priest, and inquire,) 'What business hast thou here?' (v. 3b*). He replies that Micah has hired him as his priest (v. 4b). They bid him consult the oracle for them (v. 5), and receive from him a favourable response (v. 6). They come to Laish, and find its people secure and confident (v.7*). Returning, they urge their clansmen to go against the place, which will be an easy conquest and a most desirable possession (v.8*.9*.10*). Accordingly, six hundred fighting men of the clan, with their families, set out on the expedition (v.11*.12.13). The spies apprise them that in the village are an ephōd and teraphīm (v.14). The armed band halts at the gate (v.16), while the five spies go to Micah's house to take the ephōd and teraphīm (v.18a)*. The priest, who is standing at the door, demands what they are doing (v.17b*.18b); they bid him hold his peace and come with them, and be the tribe's priest (v.19). Without more ado, he takes the images and accompanies them; they join the main body, and march away. Micah raises the villagers and pursues them, but is driven back by rude threats (v.20-26). The Danites take Laish, and set up Micah's images in their sanctuary (v.27-29.30?). The second account is not so completely preserved, especially toward the end. It begins by relating the circumstances under which Micah's images (pesel and massekah) were made, of silver which had been stolen from his mother (17<sup>2-4</sup>). For his priest he had a young Judean Levite who was living in the neighbourhood (v.7), whom he treated as one of his own sons (v.11b.12a). The sending out of the Danite exploring expedition must have been related substantially as in the other account (18<sup>1f</sup>*). As they come into the vicinity of Micah's house, they recognize the voice of the young Levite, and turning aside thither inquire of him what he is doing there (v.3*). He replies: So and so Micah has done to me (v.4a). They find Laish dwelling in security, after the manner of the Phoenicians (v.7*). They report to their kinsmen at home, and bid them make no delay to occupy the land (v.8-10*). They accordingly emigrate from their former seats (v.11*). On their way they come to Micah's home, and turn aside thither to the house of the young Levite, and salute him (v.15). In what follows it is only clear that they got possession of Micah's pesel and massekah, and carried them off; it is probable that the young Levite accompanied them voluntarily. To this source v.31 seems to belong. Traces of it are also perhaps to be recognized in the account of the taking of Laish. Budde attributes the first of the two narratives, as restored by him, to E. Teraphīm, which are not often mentioned in the O.T. (Hos. 3<sup>4</sup> with ephōd, 1 S. 15<sup>23</sup> 19<sup>13.16</sup> 2 K. 23<sup>24</sup> &c.), are found in the Hexateuch only in E, Gen. 31<sup>19.34f</sup>, which also affords a striking parallel to Micah's pursuit, Jud. 18<sup>21ff</sup>; cf. Gen. 31<sup>23</sup> with Jud. 18<sup>22</sup>; 31<sup>30</sup> with 18<sup>24</sup>. The comparatively rare גַּזַּל, 'spy out,' is found in Gen. 42 Nu. 21<sup>32</sup> (E); the story of Rahab and the taking of Jericho, in which the word occurs, is also prob. from E. Cf. also אֱלֹהִים Jud. 18<sup>5.10</sup>. It would then be natural to ascribe the other version of the story to J, but for this Budde has no positive grounds, while Jos. 19<sup>47</sup> (G) might argue against it.† Kitt., whose analysis agrees substantially with Budde's (see above, p. 367), doubts whether the second version ever existed by itself; the obvious tendency to put all the actors in an odious light suggests that it may be wholly the work of an editor. This hypothesis, which is virtually that of Oort and Wellhausen (above, p. 366 f.), hardly does justice to the facts which point to composition rather than interpolation. The evidence which Budde has adduced is perhaps not conclusive. So far as the general impression which the narrative makes may be trusted, I should be strongly inclined to ascribe the first version to the same hand from which we have the stories of Samson, the first version of the history of Gideon, and other parts of the Book of Judges which Budde, I think rightly, attributes to J.

The note, "In those days there was no king in Israel, every man did as he pleased" (17<sup>6</sup> 18<sup>1a</sup> cf. 19<sup>1</sup> 21<sup>25</sup>), is probably the comment of an editor, who felt it necessary to explain how such lawless doings went unrestrained and unpunished. That the writer of these words must have lived before the exile is perhaps too positively affirmed by Kuenen. Chapter 18<sup>30, 31</sup> throws some light on the age of the stories. Verse<sup>31</sup> tells us that the image which Micah had made stood in Dan as long as the house of God was at Shiloh. Unfortunately, we do not know when this temple was destroyed. In the historical books there is no mention of it after the time of Eli; in the next generation the priests of his house were at Nob, and it is commonly believed that Shiloh was destroyed during the Philistine wars. But Jeremiah (7<sup>12, 14</sup>) points to Shiloh as a conspicuous example of a holy place which Yahweh had destroyed for the wickedness of Israel, in a manner which hardly suggests that he is drawing his lesson from such ancient history, and others therefore think of the Assyrian wars. According to v.<sup>30</sup>, the priesthood of the line of Jonathan presided at Dan down to the deportation, by which is probably meant the deportation of the inhabitants of that region by Tiglath-pileser in 734 B.C. (2 K. 15<sup>29</sup>).* There seems to be no decisive reason why v.<sup>30, 31</sup> should not be ascribed to the sources from which the two versions of the story are derived,† though this has been doubted,‡ and in the nature of the case cannot be proved.

The first version of the story, at least, seems to be very old; it speaks of Micah's ephōd with as little prejudice as the older narrative in ch. 8 of Gideon's. The origin of the image in the famous sanctuary at Dan is an interesting matter of history; the way in which the Danites got possession of it makes a very good story. The author's sympathies, so far as he shows them, are on the side of the spoilers; he makes them not only rob Micah, but mock him.

In the second version, especially in 17<sup>2-4</sup>, many scholars think that the whole motive is to cast reproach upon the sanctuary at Dan;* its venerated image was made of silver which a son had stolen from his own mother; when the money was recovered and dedicated to Yahweh, the greater part of it was kept back by fraud; the idol itself was stolen from its owner by the Danites. It is by no means clear, however, that the author had anything of the sort in mind. If such had been his prime motive, he would surely have begun by telling the story of the theft; but this is not done, nor is there any trace of contempt or even condemnation in the following narrative. Chapter 17<sup>2-4</sup> merely explains how so costly and splendid an idol came to be in the possession of a private person; it was an ex voto for the recovery of the money. If this interpretation be correct, there is no necessity for regarding the second version as much younger than the first.

The historical value of these chapters is hardly inferior to that of any in the book. The picture of the social and religious state of the times which they contain is full of life, and bears every mark of truthfulness. The tribe, or clan, of the Danites, unable permanently to establish itself in the south (13<sup>4</sup> cf. Jos. 19<sup>47</sup> H and G), sends its spies to seek a new location. They find an isolated and unguarded Phœnician town in the far north, and six hundred fighting men, apparently the greater part of the tribe, migrate thither, sack the town, and occupy it. In this narrative, apart from its own importance for the history of this tribe, we have doubtless a type of many similar enterprises in the period of conquest; cf. esp. Jos. 17<sup>14-18</sup>. Images of Yahweh, sometimes of considerable cost and splendour, are found in the possession not only of a judge, like Gideon (8<sup>27</sup>), but of private persons, who may even have a shrine or small temple (beth-elohim) for them. Where there was such an image, a priest was needed. If no better was at hand, a man might consecrate one of his sons ; but a Levite was preferred (17<sup>13</sup>), that is, a member of the hereditary guild who possessed the traditional religious lore and, especially, technical skill in consulting and interpreting the oracle. The Levites were not all of one tribe ; it is to be noted that the Levites in ch. 17 f. and in ch. 19 are all in some way connected with Bethlehem of Judah, and the young Levite whom Micah installs as priest in the second version of our story is expressly said to have been "of the clan of Judah." The famous sanctuary at Dan contained an image which the Danites had carried off from Mt. Ephraim in their migration. Its priesthood, to the end, claimed descent from Moses, as was perhaps the case with the priests of other northern sanctuaries.

The period in which the action of these chapters falls is not determined by their position in the book. In the Book of Judges proper they were evidently not included at all. The later editor who, to our good fortune, preserved them could hardly have introduced them into the body of the book, with its strongly marked plan and purpose ; and the migration of Danites from Zorah and Eshtaol might seem to find its fittest place immediately after the story of Samson, the scene of which is the Danite settlements in and around those towns. But we cannot safely draw from the story of Samson, in which Danites are settled at Zorah and Eshtaol, the converse inference that the migration of ch. 18 occurred after the time of Samson, i.e. after the beginning of the Philistine aggressions, and therefore toward the end of the period of the judges ; for the narrative does not imply that all the Danites joined in the expedition to Laish, wholly abandoning their old seats, and it is on other grounds improbable that this was the case.* There is no intimation either in the story of Samson or in ch. 18 of such a pressure from the side of the Philistines as might force the Danites out of their settlements ; 18<sup>1</sup> agrees perfectly with 18<sup>34</sup>, and we shall do better, therefore, to explain their failure to establish themselves there by the stubborn resistance of the native population of the Lowland, the Amorites (18<sup>34</sup>, cf. Jos. 19<sup>47f.</sup>). The removal of a considerable part of the tribe may have left room enough for those who remained behind. Chapter 5<sup>17</sup> shows that in the time of Deborah the tribe was already in its northern seats. The migration related in ch. 18 may therefore, with considerable probability, be assigned to a time not very long after the Israelite invasion of Canaan. Chapter 18<sup>30</sup> would fix it in the next generation after the invasion, if we could be confident that no links in the genealogy are omitted.*

XVII. 1-6. Micah's idols. — A man of Mt. Ephraim, Micah by name, confesses that he has in his possession the silver which has been stolen from his mother, and restores it. Of part of it she has an idol made, which is in Micah's house. Micah has a shrine, makes an ephōd and teraphīm, and consecrates one of his sons as priest. — 1. There was a man of the Highlands of Ephraim, whose name was Micáyehu] on the Highlands of Ephraim, see on 3<sup>27</sup>. The name and residence of the man seems to have been the same in both narratives. Micáyehu, v.<sup>4</sup>; elsewhere in the chapters the common shorter form of the name, Micah (v.<sup>5.8.9</sup> &c.); cf. Micayehu ben Imlah, 1 K. 22<sup>9</sup>, and Micah the Morasthite, Mic. 1<sup>1</sup>. — 2-4. Micah, dreading his mother's curse, confesses the theft, and makes restitution; she dedicates the silver to Yahweh, and has two hundred shekels of it made into an idol, which is in Micah's house. The verses belong to the second account. The text is not in order; the money passes back and forth in an unaccountable way: in v.<sup>3a</sup> he returns it to his mother; in v.<sup>3b</sup> she declares her purpose to give it back to him; in v.<sup>4a</sup> he again returns it to her. Budde conjectures that the last words of v.<sup>3</sup>, and now I will return it to thee, and the beginning of v.<sup>4</sup>, have been accidentally displaced from their original position after v.<sup>2a</sup>; v.<sup>3a</sup> is then a restoration of v.<sup>4a</sup>, not exactly in the right place. For another hypothesis, see below. — 2. The eleven hundred shekels of silver] compare the eleven hundred shekels which the Philistine rulers promise Delilah (16<sup>6</sup>).† — Which were taken from thee] by theft, as appears from the following ; the neutral expression, taken, is perhaps employed with intention.* — And thou cursedst, and further saidst in my hearing] cursed the unknown thief. What she said is not found in the text ; interpreters supply from the context, didst utter the curse in my hearing,† but it is doubtful whether the Hebrew will admit this, and the force of the particle (also, even, further) is lost. Budde surmises that the words of the curse itself have been suppressed, through a scruple which has in other instances led to alterations in the text ; see, e.g., 1 S. 25<sup>22</sup>. ‡ In view of the derangement which unquestionably exists in these verses, the conjecture may be hazarded, that the words which are missing here have been preserved in v.<sup>4b</sup>, and that we should reconstruct : And thou cursedst, and also saidst to me, ‘I sacredly consecrate the silver to Yahweh . . . to make an idol,’ — the silver is in my possession, I took it ; and now I will return it to thee. § And his mother said, Blessed is my son of Yahweh. So he returned the silver to his mother, and she took two hundred shekels, &c. (v.<sup>4</sup>). — Upon this hypothesis, he was moved to make restoration, not merely by fear of his mother’s curse, but by the fact that the silver itself was thus rendered sacrosanct, or put under a taboo, || so that to keep or use it would be a sacrilege which Yahweh was sure to avenge. ¶ The transposition of v.<sup>3b</sup> may have been made by a scribe who, misunderstanding the connexion, thought that the consecration (v.<sup>3b</sup>) should stand closer to the execution of the vow (v.<sup>4</sup>). — And his mother said, Blessed of Yahweh is my son] the curse cannot be unsaid, but may be neutralized by a blessing ; therefore, after restitution or expiation made, the offending party seeks the blessing of the injured, to avert further evil (2 S. 21<sup>3</sup> Ex. 12<sup>32</sup>). Curses and blessings, we must remember, are not, in the conception of men in this stage of culture, mere wishes, but real potencies of good and evil. The word has a magical power. A blessing once uttered, even if obtained by fraud, cannot be revoked (Gen. 27, esp. v.<sup>33-37</sup>) ; a curse, once launched, pursues its object like an Erinys.* The curse, therefore, inspires religious terror; and a parent's curse is the most terrible of all. The working of such beliefs upon the guilty conscience can be readily imagined. In such a case as this, the curse involved not only the criminal, but all who, being cognizant of the wrong, made themselves accessory to it by concealing their knowledge (Lev. 5<sup>1</sup> Prov. 29<sup>24</sup>); it was therefore an effective means of extorting testimony. In a more advanced stage of religion, it is Yahweh who executes the curse in righteousness, and it is harmless to the innocent.† Here, if our restoration of the verses is right, the fear which the curse inspires is reinforced by the perils of the taboo; see above, p. 373. — 3. So he returned the eleven hundred shekels of silver to his mother] these words stand in their proper place in v.<sup>4a</sup>, following the promise to restore them, v.<sup>3bβ</sup>; see above, p. 373. — I sacredly consecrate the silver to Yahweh] in the present order of the context, this dedication must be regarded, not as her original intention (I had consecrated it), but as a purpose formed upon the recovery of the money, to avert the consequences of the curse, which, contrary to her expectation, had lighted on the head of her own son; for their probable original position and significance, see above on v.<sup>2</sup>. — From my hand to my son] the words are variously interpreted: ut de manu mea suscipiat filius meus, et faciat sculptile; ‡ or, for the benefit of my son, i.e. to expiate his guilt; § or, to furnish and adorn his shrine. || As it is not the son, but the mother, who has the image made, the second of these explanations is the most satisfactory in the present context. If the original order of the verses was as has been conjectured above, the son would be named merely as the beneficiary. But G has, from my hand alone; ¶ no one else can fulfil the vow of consecration, and, by having an image made, lift the taboo from the rest of the silver. This is almost certainly the original reading; and it strongly confirms the conjectural restoration which is proposed above. — To make an idol] lit. a graven image and a molten image; Heb. pesel and massekah. Pesel is properly a carving, sculpture, carved figure in wood or stone; in the O.T. always the image of a god.* As such images were the oldest, and probably always the most common, pesel is also used generically for 'idol,' including such as were cast in metal (Is. 30<sup>22</sup> 40<sup>19</sup> 44<sup>10</sup> Jer. 10<sup>14</sup>; cf. Jud. 17<sup>4</sup>). The proper name of the latter was massekah, or neseh (Is. 41<sup>20</sup>); they were, as the name imports, cast in a mould, and generally, it seems, of gold or silver. The name is applied particularly to the little golden bulls (images of Yahweh) which were worshipped in the Northern Kingdom (2 K. 17<sup>16</sup> cf. 1 K. 12<sup>28</sup>), and to the similar image which Aaron made at Horeb (Ex. 32<sup>4, 8</sup> Dt. 9<sup>12, 16</sup> Neh. 9<sup>18</sup>). Pesel and massekah are coupled in Dt. 27<sup>15</sup> to comprehend every kind of idol (cf. also Nah. 1<sup>14</sup> Is. 48<sup>5</sup>), and similarly in the parallelism of prophetic discourse (e.g. Jer. 10<sup>14</sup> = 51<sup>17</sup> Hab. 2<sup>18</sup> Is. 42<sup>17</sup>). In the passage before us the conjunction of the two terms cannot be explained in this way, and creates serious difficulty. The natural interpretation of the words in the context is, that two idols of different kinds are meant, one carved in wood or stone, the other cast in silver; and this appears to be confirmed by v.<sup>4b</sup>, and by the subsequent narrative, in which the two names constantly recur side by side as if they stood for two distinct things. On the other hand, the idol is an image of Yahweh (v.<sup>3</sup>), and we see no motive for making, besides the costly silver idol, a cheaper wooden one † to stand in the same shrine. Further, both pesel and massekah are made by the silversmith: he made a pesel and a massekah, and it stood in Micah's house (v.<sup>4</sup>). Observe also the singular verb, which can refer to but one image. Finally, in 18<sup>30f.</sup> we read only of the pesel which the Danites set up; but it is surely in the highest degree improbable that they carried off both a wooden and a silver idol, and set up in their own sanctuary only the less valuable of the two. We are warranted, therefore, in seriously questioning the text, and a closer scrutiny of the composite text of 18<sup>14, 17, 18, 20</sup> confirms our suspicion. Only in the first of these verses is the order natural, ephōd, teraphim, pesel, massekah; in

v.<sup>17, 18</sup>, on the contrary, we find pesel, ephōd, teraphim, massekah, suggesting that the last name was added in the process of composition or subsequently; and to support this inference, in v.<sup>20</sup> massekah does not occur at all,* while in v.<sup>30†</sup>, as already noticed, pesel stands alone. It is reasonably certain, therefore, that the author of this second narrative wrote throughout only pesel, and that an editor or scribe, observing that the idol (pesel) was of silver, added the more exact term massekah.† This hypothesis relieves the difficulties which have so much exercised interpreters. — And now I will return it to thee] the words of Micah, which should immediately follow v.<sup>2a</sup>, the silver is in my possession; I took it. — 4. So he returned the silver to his mother] in the original context this clause was preceded by v.<sup>2b</sup>, Blessed by Yahweh is my son; cf. v.<sup>3a</sup>. The interpreters who follow the present order of the text are not able to give any reasonable explanation of the words. ‡ — His mother took two hundred shekels of silver and gave them to the silversmith] what became of the other nine hundred is not said. Kimchi explains that the two hundred shekels were the wages of the artist, the remainder of the silver was made into the image; a Lyra and others, that the rest of the money was used for furnishing and adorning the shrine; § Auberlen, that the woman through avarice broke her vow, and gave to Yahweh only a small part of the consecrated treasure; || Kuenen, adopting this explanation, finds here additional evidence of the author's desire to cast contempt on the worship at Dan. ¶ All these interpretations are far-fetched, and they are really superfluous. The intention of the dedication (v.<sup>3</sup>) was not to devote the whole of the treasure to the making of an image, but to compel the thief to restore it by putting the whole under a taboo until she herself had made, from this silver, an image of Yahweh. If the author had understood that the woman vowed to make the whole weight of metal into an image, he would have given his own explanation of the discrepancy. The silversmith appears in the Old Testament chiefly as

Phoenicisches Glossar, p. 45, cf. s.v. מסך ib. p. 42. The Israelites first became acquainted with this kind of images, as with the art of the founder altogether, in Canaan.* This may account for the fact that the oldest prohibition of idols (Ex. 34<sup>17</sup>) names only the מסכה; it was a new and conspicuously foreign thing. Some scholars who, with sound exegetical discernment, have felt that the narrative admits but one idol, have endeavoured to reconcile the text with this interpretation by the hypothesis that pesel means the wooden core of the image, massekah a silver covering with which it was overlaid; pesel and massekah are the composite name of such an idol. That this was not the understanding of the author (or editor) is manifest from 18<sup>17</sup>,<sup>18</sup>, where the two words, which on this theory should be inseparable, are separated from each other by two other nouns. There is no warrant elsewhere in the O.T. for this opinion, against which the etymological meaning of massekah is in itself conclusive; plating a wooden image with gold or silver is not casting. Others understand by pesel the image, by massekah the metal base or pedestal on which it stood; so Schm., Hengstenb., Kc., al. This is wholly at variance with the usage of the latter word. — The restoration of v. 2-3 proposed in the text would read as follows: ויאמר לאמו אלף ומאה הכסף אשר לקח לך ואת אֵלֶיךָ וגם אמרת באוני 'הקדש הקדשתי את הכסף ליהוה מירי לבדי לעשות פסל' הנה הכסף אתי אני לקחתיו ועתה אשיבנו לך. ותאמר אמו 'ברוך בני ליהוה.' וישב את הכסף לאמו ותקח אמו מאתים כסף ותתננו לצורף וגו'.

Micah has a shrine and oracle; he installs his son as priest. — Verse<sup>5</sup> is not the continuation of v.<sup>4</sup>, but its counterpart in the other version of the story; the ephōd and teraphim which he makes for his shrine correspond to the pesel and massekah which Micah's mother has made, and which are in his house; see above, p. 366 f. — The man Micah had a shrine] † the words must originally have followed v.<sup>1</sup>; the form of the sentence suggests that the man Micah has been repeated here by the editor, to recover connexion with v.<sup>1</sup> after the introduction of v.<sup>2-4</sup>. Shrine; lit. god-house, a small temple which sheltered the idol or other object of worship, as the house of God at Shiloh (18<sup>31</sup>) held the ark. sacred tree.* The temple in our text belonged to a rich private citizen of Mt. Ephraim, who was its proprietor, as Gideon was of that at Ophrah in which he set up his ephōd.† — And made an ephōd and teraphim] Gideon's ephōd, made of seventeen hundred shekels of gold and 'set up' in the sanctuary at Ophrah, an object of worship (8<sup>27</sup>), was clearly an idol of some kind.‡ Micah's ephōd is constantly associated with teraphim, which were certainly idols; when the Danites carry off his ephōd and teraphim, he cries after them, You have taken the gods (or, god) which I made (18<sup>24</sup>).§ In 1 S. 21<sup>9</sup> we read that Goliath's sword was preserved at Nob as a trophy, wrapped in a mantle behind the ephōd, which we must imagine, therefore, as standing free from the wall. In the history of Saul and David the ephōd is employed in consulting the oracle of Yahweh (1 S. 14<sup>18</sup> ¶ cf. v.<sup>3</sup>; 23<sup>6,9</sup> 30<sup>7</sup>).|| In all these passages the ephōd may be an idol; but it must be admitted that, with the exception of Jud. 8<sup>27</sup>, none of them imperatively requires this interpretation. All that can with certainty be gathered from them is that it was a portable object which was employed or manipulated by the priest in consulting the oracle. In the Priest's Law-book, the ephōd is a part of the ceremonial dress of the High Priest, to which the oracle-pouch containing the Urim and Thummim is attached; ¶ but, while it is probable that the oracle of the High Priest is a survival of the ancient priestly oracle by the ephōd, it is impossible to explain the references to the ephōd in Judges and Samuel by the descriptions in P. See further in crit. note.—The teraphim were idols (Gen. 31<sup>19</sup> cf. v.<sup>30</sup>, my gods; 35<sup>2,4</sup>); we find them not only in the possession of the Aramaean Laban, in the patriarchal story, but in the house of

* The lishkah, 1 S. 9<sup>22</sup>, was a hall for sacrificial feasts, not a temple.

† It was a common thing in the ancient world for a family or clan to be the proprietary custodians of a holy place; see E. Meyer, GdA. ii. p. 431; Wellhausen, Reste arab. Heidentumes, p. 128 f.; cf. Ibn Hishām, p. 303.

‡ It would be more exact to say, an agalma; in using the word idol here and below, I do not wish to be understood to assume that it was iconic.

§ We cannot argue here from the material used; the two hundred shekels of silver (v.<sup>4</sup>) belong to a different strand of the narrative.

|| It is perhaps not without significance that in all these cases the oracle is consulted, not at a holy place, but by a commander in the field, or by David in the Philistine country. David's ephōd came from Nob (1 S. 23<sup>6</sup>).

¶ See Nowack, Hebr. Archäologie, ii. p. 118 ff.

David (1 S. 19<sup>13-16</sup>); from the last passage it appears that they were sometimes of considerable size. In Hos. 3<sup>4</sup> teraphim are named in close connexion with the ephōd, as in the chapters before us, and, like the ephōd, were employed in divination (2 K. 23<sup>24</sup> Ez. 21<sup>21</sup>* Zech. 10<sup>2</sup>). It has been inferred from Gen. 31 1 S. 19 Jud. 17<sup>5</sup>, that the teraphim were household gods;† and recently the theory has been advanced that they were the images of the ancestors of the family, so that the consultation of the teraphim was a species of Manes oracle.‡ Of this there is no evidence; even that the teraphim were specifically household gods is scarcely borne out by the usage (cf. esp. Ez. 21<sup>21</sup>). See crit. note. — Having a shrine, Micah now needed a priest, to take charge of the house and to consult and interpret the oracle (18<sup>5f</sup>). — He installed one of his sons, and he became his priest] lit. filled the hand of one of his sons, the technical term for the investiture of a priest (v.<sup>12</sup> 1 K. 13<sup>33</sup> Lev. 8<sup>33</sup> &c.). The original meaning of the phrase is not certainly known.§ Some scholars take it to mean that Micah placed in his son's hands the parts of his first sacrifice (cf. Ex. 29<sup>22-25</sup> Lev. 8<sup>25-28</sup> 2 Chr. 13<sup>9</sup>); || others think that it signifies that Micah gave him his wages or an earnest of them in hand, to bind the bargain; ¶ others still interpret, he bestowed on him the office of priest.** With the installation of Micah's son compare 1 S. 7<sup>1</sup>: when the ark was brought to Kirjath-jearim, to the house of Abinadab, he consecrated Eleazar his son to keep the ark.

What connexion there is between this linen ephōd and the gorgeous ephōd of the High Priest in P is again not clear. Older commentators, almost without exception, ¶ and many modern scholars think that the ephōd is in all places, including Jud. 827 17 18, a piece of the priest's dress: so Di. (*Exod. u. JDMich. inferred from Is. 30<sup>22</sup>, אֵפֹדִית מַסַּכֶּת זָהָב, compared with the parallel clause, that Gideon's אֵפֹד was a wooden image covered with metal, and his opinion has obtained general acceptance among those who think that the ephōd was an idol; but this is extremely doubtful. The verb אָפַד in Heb. (Ex. 29<sup>5</sup> Lev. 8<sup>7</sup>) is denominative; as is also אָפַדָּה Ex. 28<sup>8</sup> 39<sup>5</sup>. Lagarde, with great probability, connects the word with the root וָפַד, which appears in Arab. wafada, 'come as an envoy' to a ruler, or great man, &c.; ** and in Syr. ܐܦܕܐ, a long robe (used in S to translate אֵפֹד; in g often for λόγισον). See Lagarde, Bildung der Nomina, p. 178; Mittheilungen, iv. p. 17. This etymology does not, however, help us much toward explaining the meaning of the word אֵפֹד in the O.T.; that הָעֵפֹד הָאֵלֹהִים is the garment of approach to God (Lag.) is more ingenious than plausible. — [הַרְפִּים] the etymology is obscure. †† Some older

As teraphim first appear in the O.T. in the possession of the Aramaean Laban, it is very probable that these stories about the Harranians are the source of the Jewish descriptions of the teraphim head cited above. — On the Teraphim see Spencer, De legibus ritualibus, l. iii. diss. 7, who argues with considerable force that the Urim and Thummim were of the same nature with the Teraphim, and took their place; Selden, De Dis Syris, synt. i. c. 2, with Beyer's Additamenta; Pfeiffer, Exercitationes biblicae, exerc. iv.; cf. also Jerome, ep. 29, De Ephod et Theraphim.

It has been argued that such a comment would be natural only for one who lived in a flourishing period of the monarchy, and that the editing of ch. 17, 18, must therefore have taken place before the fall of the kingdom of Judah. ¶ This is perhaps not strictly cogent; an editor who lived in the Babylonian exile might have made the same remark. But, as there are no traces in the chapters of the exilic point of view, it is probable that the verses cited were written before that time. — 7. Levite, who is living in Micah's neighbourhood, is as one of his own sons (v.<sup>11b</sup>), and is installed by him as his priest (v.<sup>12a</sup>). Verse <sup>8-11a</sup> is the counterpart of this in the other narrative: the Levite man wanders forth from Bethlehem to find a place for himself; he comes to Micah's home, and is hired by him to be his father and priest in the room of his son. The words, from Bethlehem of Judah, in v.<sup>7</sup>, which occasion an awkward redundancy, were probably introduced by the editor from what went before v.<sup>8</sup> in the first narrative. — There was a young man (from Bethlehem of Judah) of the clan of Judah, and he was a Levite] how a Levite could be of the clan of Judah has greatly perplexed interpreters. Theodoret discusses the difficulty at length, and offers two explanations: * 1. The words are an epexegetis of those which immediately precede: Bethlehem of Judah, that is, belonging to the clan of Judah; † but, taken in this way, they are entirely superfluous. 2. The Levite's mother was of the tribe of Judah; ‡ but that would not make him a member of that tribe, still less could he be of both his father's and his mother's tribes, as this theory really assumes. A like objection lies against the opinion of many modern scholars, that he is said to be of the clan of Judah because his parents' home was at Bethlehem. § Kuenen would reject the words as a gloss; || but the last thing a scribe would think of would be to represent a Levite as a member of another tribe. ¶ The true explanation probably is that Levite here designates his calling, not his race. He was a regularly trained priest, who possessed the traditional religious lore, and especially the art of using and interpreting the oracle. The calling was doubtless, like all others, ordinarily, though not exclusively, hereditary; and in later times all Levites were supposed to be descended from an eponymous ancestor, Levi. This genealogical fiction was made the easier by the fact that there was an old tribe, Levi, of the same stock with Judah and Simeon, which had been broken up, and whose scattered members may in considerable numbers have followed the calling of priests, which their relation to Moses naturally opened to them.* But in early times it was not the pedigree, but the art, that was the essential thing; and there was no more difficulty in the statement that this Levite was of Judæan blood than in the fact that Samuel, who was of Ephraimite descent, was brought up as a priest at Shiloh. — And he was residing there] 19<sup>1,16</sup>; as the Hebrew word implies, living as a client among a tribe of which he was not a member. There, is not at Bethlehem, as commentators have felt constrained by v.<sup>8</sup> to interpret, but in the neighbourhood of Micah's home in the Highlands of Ephraim; cf. 18<sup>15a</sup>.†

7. לוי [לוי] has the usual form of a gentile adjective, and it has been conjectured that the name of the tribe Levi is merely the gentile adj. from לוא (Leah), the name of the stock of which Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah are branches; ‡ and this explanation, though not entirely free from difficulty, is certainly possible. The tribe of Levi was associated with Simeon in the treacherous attack on Shechem (Gen. 34<sup>25-31</sup>), which was repudiated by Israel (Gen. 34<sup>30</sup>); the two tribes never recovered from the vengeance which the Canaanites took upon them, but were completely broken; their scattered members attached themselves as clients to other tribes (Gen. 49<sup>5-7</sup>).§ On the tribe of Levi see Nowack, Hebr. Archäologie, ii. p. 87 ff., and the literature cited there, p. 87. — Still more obscure is the origin of the name לוי in the sense of priest (Ex. 4<sup>14</sup> &c.). If a Hebrew etymology is to be sought for it, the primary meaning would be, one who is attached to, or associates himself with, a person or thing; cf. Nu. 18<sup>2,4</sup> Is. 14<sup>1</sup> 56<sup>3</sup>; see Lagarde, Orientalia, ii. p. 20 f.; Mittheilungen, i. p. 229; Baudissin, Priesterthum, p. 50, 74 n. We should then most naturally explain לוי as one who is attached to God, or to the holy place; but this is purely conjectural. In the inscriptions from Southern Arabia, לוא occurs in the sense of 'priest,' לוואה, 'priestess' (Hommel, Südarabische Chrestomathie, p. 127). We might be tempted to combine this

* This combination is, of course, purely conjectural; the relation between the old tribe Levi and the Levite priests is involved in the densest obscurity. See We., Pro18, p. 146 f.

† Ch. 17<sup>8</sup> comes from a different source. There is no reason to question the genuineness of the words לוי גר שם in v.<sup>7</sup>, as Smend is inclined to do.

‡ We., Sta., WRSmith, Nöld. Leah is perhaps "the wild cow tribe"; Nöld., al. For another hypothesis, see Jastrow, JBL. xi. p. 121.

with the Arab. lawīya, a portion of food set aside for an honoured guest (cf. 1 S. 9<sup>23</sup>), which We. had noted (Reste arab. Heidentumes, p. 114 n.); the lawīya would be originally the priest's portion. — [וְהָיָה נָר שָׁם] the verb נָר is used of one who resides among men of another clan, tribe, or people, where, as he is without the protection of his own kin, he must depend for protection on some individual or family of the community, whose client he becomes; see Nowack, Hebr. Archäologie, i. p. 336 ff.; W. R. Smith, Religion of the Semites, p. 75 ff. The sentence does not allow us to interpret the words, he resided there, as referring to his former residence at Bethlehem; there can only be, in the vicinity of Micah's home.

8. From the first narrative; see above on v.<sup>7</sup>. It must have been preceded by a sentence or two, introducing this Levite; perhaps simply, "Now there was a Levite from Bethlehem of Judah." This was omitted by the editor, as a doublet to v.<sup>7</sup>; only the last words, from Bethlehem of Judah, were inserted by him from this source in v.<sup>7</sup> and v.<sup>8</sup>, in both of which they are out of place. It is noteworthy that the Levites of ch. 17, 18, and of 19-21 all come from Judah, and two of them, at least, from Bethlehem. It is a not improbable surmise that the fragments of the broken tribe of Levi attached themselves to Judah, as Simeon did. A close connexion with Judah is indicated also by the names of Levite families such as Libnī, Hebronī, Qorhī; Korah (Qorah) was originally a clan of Judah.* — And the man went from the city (from Bethlehem of Judah) to live where he should find a place] not necessarily seeking employment as a priest. In the course of his wanderings, he came to the part of the Highlands of Ephraim in which Micah lived. The words, as he journeyed (EV), † lit. in making, or, to make his journey, represent an unusual phrase in Hebrew, and may perhaps better be translated, to accomplish the object of his journey; see crit. note. — 9. Micah learns who and what the stranger is. — 10. He hires him as his priest. — Stay with me and be my father and priest] 18<sup>19</sup>; father is a title of respect given to prophets (2 K. 6<sup>21</sup> &c.) and priests, as also to the king's chief minister or vizier (Gen. 45<sup>8</sup>). The connecting notion is probably that of a revered adviser, counsellor; the use of the word father in our text does not necessarily imply

The offer was evidently regarded as an advantageous one for the Levite. — 11. The Levite agreed to stay with the man] these words should follow immediately upon Micah's offer, v.<sup>10a</sup>; the last words of v.<sup>10</sup>, and the Levite went, which now interpose, have either arisen by transcriptional accident or are a fragment of the other source.† — And the youth was to him as one of his sons] this half-verse belongs to the second narrative (v.<sup>2-4.7</sup>); the young Judaeen Levite, who resided there, and was perhaps a client of Micah, becomes like a son to him. — 12. And Micah installed the Levite, and the youth became his priest] v.<sup>5</sup>. I am inclined to ascribe the whole of this half-verse to the second narrator, continuing v.<sup>11b</sup>; though the first clause would fit equally well in the other version, after v.<sup>11a</sup>. The second half-verse: And he was in Micah's house, belongs to the first account (after v.<sup>11a</sup>); the young Levite of the other has a house of his own (18<sup>18</sup>). The union of the two sources has led to a multiplication of explicit subjects. — 13. Micah is greatly elated by his good fortune. — Now I know that Yahweh will prosper me, because I have got the Levite as priest] the close of the first narrative. Micah's son, who had temporarily filled the place, was, after all, only a layman in such things; he confides more in the knowledge and skill of the trained priest, and is assured that under the guidance of such an interpreter of the mind of Yahweh he will prosper in everything.

Jerome erroneously joined the words to the following: In diebus illis non erat rex in Israel, et tribus Dan quaerebat possessionem sibi, &c., and was naturally followed in the division of the chapters which was introduced in the Latin Bible in the 13th century, and from it into the printed Hebrew Bible.* — And in those days the tribe of the Danites was seeking for itself a territory to settle] and is inserted by the editor to regain his connexion after the introduction of v.<sup>1a</sup>. Territory: properly estate, hereditary possession in land. The following sentence, as it stands, must be translated: For there had not fallen to it, up to that time, among the tribes of Israel [anything] as a possession. The verb has no subject, the construction is harsh, the phraseology suggests a later hand, and possibly the whole clause is a correct gloss to the preceding. See crit. note.

1. שבט דני cf. Dt. 10<sup>8</sup> 29<sup>7</sup>. In the genealogical system, Dan and Naphtali form a subordinate group (Bilhah) of the Rachel tribes, and are thus connected, though not on an equal footing, with Joseph and Benjamin. The Danites first attempted to establish themselves on the SW. of Joseph, but were prevented by the native Amorite population from gaining or maintaining a hold in the maritime plain, and were pushed back into the hills in the angle between Ephraim and Judah (Jud. 1<sup>34</sup>). As narrated in the chapter before us, and more briefly in Jos. 19<sup>47</sup> (cf. 6), the greater part of the tribe migrated to the extreme north, where they settled at the sources of the Jordan. Notwithstanding the census, Nu. 1<sup>39</sup> 26<sup>43</sup>, which gives Dan over 60,000 fighting men, the tribe was apparently always a small one. But one son (clan) of Dan is named in the genealogies (השיס Gen. 46<sup>23</sup> שוהם Nu. 26<sup>42</sup>). In Jud. Dan itself is called a clan (משפחה, v.<sup>2</sup>. 11. 19 cf. 13<sup>2</sup>), perhaps more accurately than a tribe (שבט); † the six hundred fighting men who migrated seem to have been the major part of the tribe. In the Song of Deborah Dan is reproached for standing aloof from the national cause (5<sup>17</sup>). The reputation of the Danites for boldness, doubtless displayed in forays and attacks on caravans rather than in war, is celebrated in Gen. 49<sup>16-18</sup> Dt. 33<sup>22</sup>. In the later history of Israel Dan plays no part. It appears in the rolls, 1 Chr. 12<sup>35</sup> 27<sup>22</sup>, but is missing in the genealogies, 1 Chr. 2-12, and in the N.T. Apocalypse, 7<sup>5-7</sup>. — כי לא נמלה לו.

2. The redundancies of the verse are due to the union of two closely parallel accounts. One of these seems to have told the story somewhat as follows: The Danites sent five men of their clan from Zorah and Eshtaol, to spy out the land. And they came to the Highlands of Ephraim and halted there for the night. The other may be reconstructed: They sent able men, representing the whole tribe, and said to them, Go explore the land. — Of their clan] v.<sup>11</sup> cf. 13<sup>2</sup> with the note there, 17<sup>7</sup>. In what way they recognized his voice (1 S. 26<sup>17</sup>) we are not told; most interpreters think of some peculiarities of dialect such as betrayed the Ephraimites (12<sup>6</sup>), which showed that he was a southerner and not a native of Mt. Ephraim.† Others imagine that they heard him reciting prayers or hymns, from which they knew that he was a Levite; ‡ we should then have to understand their question, What art thou doing in this place? to be merely the expression of their surprise that a Levite was practising his calling at a place where there was no public temple or frequented holy place. The most natural explanation of the words is, that the Danites had formerly known the young man; and it is by no means impossible that the author of this version of the story meant to be so understood. He does not tell us where the young Judæan Levite's former home was;* and may have imagined him as living near the Danite settlements (cf. 15<sup>9ff.</sup>).† — Who brought thee hither, and what art thou doing here, and what is thy business here?] the multiplication of questions, of which the last two are almost exactly parallel, is best explained as the result of the union of two sources. The first two clauses must be taken together, and may with some probability be ascribed to the second of the two accounts.‡ — 4. settlement of Israel,* was not far from the Lebanon and the sources of the Jordan.† According to Eusebius it was four miles distant from Paneas (Bāniās) on the road to Tyrē.‡ The name is preserved in the modern Tell el-Qāḍī, § a large mound at less than an hour's distance from Bāniās, at the foot of which are two great springs which feed the most copious of the sources of the Jordan.¶ Several ancient writers confuse Dan with the neighbouring Paneas,¶ and this identification has recently found a defender in G. A. Smith.** — In the following clauses the union of the two narratives has occasioned not only repetition but grammatical discord. One of the accounts seems to have read: They found the people who were in it undisturbed and secure; the other: They found the city dwelling in security, after the manner of the Phoenicians (an unwarlike trading folk). The continuation of the former is probably: And they were remote from the Phoenicians, and had nothing to do with any one else] many Greek manuscripts read here,†† nothing to do with Syria, which is preferred by Budde. Laish lay in the valley belonging to Beth-rehob (v.<sup>28</sup>), which was in David's time a petty Aramaean kingdom (2 S. 10<sup>6</sup>); the Aramaeans of Maachah (ib., 1 Chr. 19<sup>6</sup>) were probably also neighbours, cf. Abel (meadow of) Beth-maachah.‡‡ The reading Syria (aram) is therefore not intrinsically improbable; but the Hebrew text gives a perfectly good sense, and the external attestation of aram is too slight to weigh against it. The intervening clauses are unintelligible. The translation in RV., "For there was none in the land, possessing authority, that might put them to shame in anything," §§ cannot be extorted from the

The conjecture, [ואין מכלא מדרך בארץ] there is no one to restrain (us) from anything in the land, involves the least change in the consonant text, but is entirely unsupported.* — [יירש עזר] these words are even more difficult than those which precede; עזר† is taken by most to mean authority (lit. 'restraint, coercion'), cf. the vb. 1 S. 9<sup>17</sup> 2 Chr. 14<sup>10</sup>; so Abulw., Ki., al. mu.; by others it is rendered, wealth, treasure (GL), in support of which the Arab. غَصْر, a man became rich, came to have the comforts of life in abundance, is cited (Ges. Thes., Stud., Be., al.). It is more probable, however, that the verb led the ancient translators to guess that עזר was equivalent to אזור.‡ The text appears to be incurably corrupt; the words are hardly a gloss (Be., Bu.). — [וירבה אין להם עז אדם] BN L<sup>3</sup>: GAPSLMO ε ε και λογος αυτ αυτς μετὰ Συπας (אדם); so also in the long addition which these manuscripts have in v.<sup>9</sup>, but in v.<sup>28</sup> they also read μετὰ ἀνθρώπων. In both the old Hebrew alphabet and the square character ר is so often mistaken for ר, and vice versa, that such variations have little authority. The words have been differently understood: they had no alliance (Ra., Ki., Schm., Stud.), or, they had no controversy, quarrel (Cler.).

8-10. The report of the exploring party. — The spies return, and urge their tribesmen to set out at once against Laish, whose wide and fertile lands they praise in glowing language, while from its isolated location and the false security of its people they augur an easy conquest. — The narrative is redundant and confused, and the text not wholly in order. In v.<sup>9</sup> G has a long addition, which, in part at least, may be genuine. — 8. And their clansmen said to them, What do you . . . ? the verb seems to be lacking; if the text is sound, we might restore, report; what word do you bring back? † One of the Greek versions puts the words into the mouth of the spies: The five men came to their clansmen, to Zorah and Eshtaol, and said to their clansmen, Why are you sitting idle? § Budde emends accordingly, and his reconstruction is commended by the fact that it also disposes satisfactorily of the first words of v.<sup>9b</sup>, which in H form an abrupt and awkward exclamation. In the other recensions of G we read: Up! let us march against them; for we entered and went about in the land as far as Laish, and we saw the people that inhabit it in security,

&c. We may be inclined to see at least in the words, we entered and went about in the land as far as Laish, a part of the original text; in H the place to which they propose to lead their clansmen is not named at all. A satisfactory reconstruction of the sources is hardly possible.* — 9. Up, and let us go against them] cf. 1<sup>1-4</sup>. — We have seen the land, and it is very fertile] the words would seem to imply that the party had Laish in view when they set out; this would also explain the suffix, against them, just before, which leads Budde to suspect the text. — And you are sitting idle!] when you have such an opportunity. The exclamation is somewhat harsh; Why are you sitting idle? would be better.† — Do not delay to go to occupy the land] this seems to have been followed in the original context by the words, for God has given it into your power, v. 10<sup>ab</sup>. — 10. The region is of wide extent] the territory which will fall into your hands by the capture of the city; cf. Against this it is proper to say that κάθημαι never translates מְשֻׁבִּים or הָרַחֵץ; מְשֻׁבִּים is variously rendered by G in v. 9 ἡσυχάζετε, σιωπᾶτε, ἀμελείτε. We might explain κάθησθε by corruption of אָתָּם מְשֻׁבִּים (haplography), falsely corrected מְשֻׁבִּים. BN καὶ εἶπον τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς αὐτῶν. yearim nine or ten miles from Jerusalem on the road to Diospolis (Lydda, Ludd); * it is identified by Robinson with Qaryet el-'Ineb, better known as Abū Ghōsh; † but this is by no means certain. ‡ Kirjath-yearim was one of the cities of the Gibeonite confederacy, Jos. 9<sup>17</sup>. From 1 S. 6<sup>21</sup> 7<sup>12</sup> it appears that in the time of Samuel it was inhabited, at least chiefly, by Judahites. In Judah, in the verse before us, is merely topographical, and does not certainly warrant the inference that the Judæan occupation goes back to as remote a time as that in which the action of this chapter falls. — On this account the people gave the place the name Mahaneh Dan (Dan's Camp), which it bears to the present day. It lies west of Kirjath-yearim] lit. behind it; see note on 16<sup>3</sup>. § Whether this explanation of the origin of the name is historical may be questioned. The persistence of such a name would suggest a permanent encampment rather than a transient halting place in the migration of the tribe; see also on 13<sup>25</sup>. || Kirjath-yearim was but two or three hours distant from Zorah and Eshtaol, and a close connexion between the places is assumed in the genealogies in 1 Chr. 2<sup>50, 52-54</sup>, which may perhaps be interpreted as indicating that Zorah and Eshtaol were in post-exilic times colonized from Kirjath-yearim (observe also the Manoahites, v. <sup>52, 54</sup>); the population was then Calebite. — 13. Thence they moved on to the Highlands of Ephraim, and came to Micah's home.

14-21. The Danites take possession of Micah's idols. — The members of the exploring party inform their clansmen that there is an idol and oracle in the village, and they at once resolve to carry them off. — The account of the way in which they got possession of the images is badly confused by interpolations and glosses, and baffles emendation or analysis. It seems that in the first narrative the six hundred armed men halted at the entrance of the village, while the five spies, who knew, from their former visit, where the sacred things were, went to get them. They were challenged by the priest, who demanded what they were about. They bade him hold his peace and come with them to be the tribe's priest. He took the ephōd and teraphim, and went with them. The second account related how; when they were in the neighbourhood of Micah's home, they turned aside thither and came to the house of the young Levite and saluted him (v.<sup>15</sup>).* What followed is not preserved, or is not certainly recognizable in the present context; the author must have narrated how they went to the house of Micah and carried off the idol (pesel and massekah).† Probably in this version also the Levite was persuaded to accompany them; it is hardly to be supposed that the author would have said so much about him in ch. 17 unless he played a part in the subsequent story.—14. From the first account.—The word Laish, which is wanting in many copies of G, is obviously a gloss.—Do you know that there are in these houses an ephōd and teraphim? Micah evidently lived in a small open village. The words, and a graven image and a molten image (pesel and massekah), are added by the editor; see above, p. 366.—And now make up your minds what you will do cf. 1 S. 25<sup>17</sup>. No more than the hint was needed.—15. And they turned aside thither, and came to the house of the young Levite (to Micah's house) and gave him a friendly greeting] the words in parenthesis are a harmonistic note. The verse comes from the second narrative (the young Levite).—16. And the six hundred men with all their armour on were standing at the entrance of the gate, who were of the Danites] the main body halted without the village. The last words are superfluous, and may be a gloss meant to preclude the misunderstanding that they were the defenders of the place. That the six hundred men were standing at the gate, is repeated in v.<sup>17bβ</sup>; we are also twice told how the spies went to Micah's house and took the idols (v.<sup>17a. 18a</sup>). Some critics therefore regard the whole of v.<sup>16</sup> as a doublet to v.<sup>17bβ</sup>, introduced by an unskillful editor or scribe.* If this opinion is sound, we should include v.<sup>17a</sup> in the same judgment. — 17. And the five men who went to spy out the land went up] the superfluous explicitness with which these men are described, as in the corresponding case of the “six hundred men girt with their weapons of war,” is more in the manner of an editor or scribe than of the author of the narrative, who, when he is allowed, tells a straight story in a clear and vigorous style; see above on v.<sup>16</sup>. — Came thither, took the pesel and the ephōd and the teraphīm and the massekah] the asyndeton, which in English would make no great difficulty, is very unusual in old Hebrew, and in such a connexion almost unparalleled. This grammatical difficulty is an additional reason for thinking that v.<sup>17a</sup> is not from the hand of the author of the narrative; see above. — And the priest was standing at the entrance of the gate] of the village (cf. v.<sup>16</sup>). From v.<sup>18, 19</sup>, however, it is clear that the meeting with the priest took place at the sanctuary, not at the gate. If the clause belonged to the original story, we should have to suppose that the author wrote, at the door of the house, or simply, at the door, and that the mistake arose from confusion with the armed men at the entrance of the village. But it is equally possible that the whole clause is a gloss. — And the six hundred men girt with weapons of war] the predicate has to be supplied from the preceding, were standing at the entrance of the gate; but this can hardly be the author’s construction. It is possible, though hardly probable, that the words were originally the subject of the verbs in v.<sup>18</sup>.† — 18. And these went to Micah’s house, and took the ephōd and the teraphīm] these seems to refer to the five men who had visited the place before, in distinction from the six hundred armed men who halted at the entrance of the village. It has, the graven image of the ephōd: the graven image (pesel) is probably a gloss; the words, and the molten image (massekah), at the end are also added to complete the inventory. — The priest said to them, What are you doing?] the priest was at Micah’s house, in or near which was his shrine (17<sup>5</sup>), not at the gate of the village (v.<sup>17</sup>). — 19. The priest was elated (16<sup>25</sup> 19<sup>6,9</sup>) by the brilliant prospect, and taking the ephōd and teraphim put himself in the midst of the Danites. <sup>19</sup> adds, and the graven image; <sup>20</sup>, the graven image and the molten image; see above on v. <sup>14,18</sup>. — 21. The Danites turned and went off, putting their children, cattle, and other wealth in front, while the armed men marched behind to protect the column from pursuit.

Bu., however, retains Laish, and cancels את הארץ — לרגל את הארץ cf. v. <sup>22</sup>; Micah's home was a cluster of houses, a small hamlet. — 15. [אל בית הנער הלוי בית מיכה] the last words, identifying the house of the Levite with that of Micah, are apparently a gloss derived from 17<sup>12b</sup>, in the other version of the story. — [ויש מאות איש וג'] we should expect האיש cf. v. <sup>17</sup>. — [פתח השער] v. <sup>17</sup> 9<sup>40</sup> 2 S. 10<sup>8</sup> 11<sup>23</sup> &c.; שער is never used of the entrance of a dwelling-house. — 17. [באו שמה לקחו את הפסל] the asyndeton is without parallel in simple narrative; the examples from impassioned speech which are adduced by Stud., Be., al. are not in point. We formerly proposed to make the verbs imperative, and connect them with the end of v. <sup>14</sup>: Now know what you must do; Go thither, take the idol, &c.* This reconstruction is adopted by Bu. (Richt. u. Sam., p. 141); more likely the clauses were inserted by a late hand from v. <sup>18</sup>. — In v. <sup>17,18</sup> the Greek versions represent substantially the text of <sup>19</sup>; in <sup>27</sup> L v. <sup>17b,18a</sup> are omitted by homoeoteleuton (χαυευτόν-χαυευτόν), and the omission in <sup>28</sup> B (against <sup>N</sup>) is probably due to the same cause (εἰσῆλθον — εἰσῆλθον); the words καὶ ὁ ἱερεὺς ἐστῶς are then a subsequent correction. — 18. הפסל האמור ephōd-image, is explained by Ki. as an idol clothed with an ephōd. It is either a gloss or a transcriptional error; cf. <sup>20</sup>. — 19. [או היותך כהן וג'] with the construction cf. Gen. 2<sup>18</sup>. — [או היותך וג'] the second member of the disjunctive question is regularly introduced by אם, e.g. 9<sup>2</sup>, see note there; או is unusual, cf. Eccl. 2<sup>19</sup>, Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 150, 2, n. 2 b. —

21. הַכְּבֹדָה wealth, cf. כְּבוֹד Gen. 31<sup>1</sup> Is. 10<sup>3</sup> &c.; not specifically valuables (L). Others, connecting the word with the primary sense of כָּבַד, interpret, 'the heavy baggage,' impedimenta; Ra., Stud., al., cf. 6<sup>B</sup>.

22–26. The pursuit. — Micah and his neighbours pursue and overtake the Danites, but are rudely repulsed and return empty-handed. — Compare in general Laban's pursuit of Jacob, Gen. 31<sup>22ff.</sup>: from the similarity of the two narratives, Budde surmises that they are derived from the same source (E). — 22. When they had already gone some distance, Micah, who had hastily summoned his neighbours, overtook them. — 23. They called to the Danites to halt. — They turned their heads] lit. their faces; cf. 1 K. 8<sup>14</sup> 2 Chr. 29<sup>6</sup>. Without arresting their march, they shout back, What has brought you out? — 24. You take my gods that I made, and the priest, and go off, and what have I left? What a question to ask me, What is the matter with thee!] Micah's feelings, his despair at his loss, and his amazement at the impudence of the robbers, are admirably brought out. My gods, or my god; cf. Gen. 31<sup>30, 32</sup>. — 25. Observe the grim humour of the reply. — Don't let thy voice be heard in our company; some fierce fellows might fall upon thee, and so thou cast away thine own life and that of thy household] fierce fellows; lit. men of acrid temper; cf. 2 S. 17<sup>8</sup>, where David and his old comrades are said to be as savage as a she-bear robbed of her whelps. It is suicidal folly to provoke such men. — 26. Paying no more attention to the few peasants whom Micah had collected, the Danites continue their march. He also recognizes the disparity of force, and sadly turns back.

27–31. The conquest of Laish. — The Danites find the place undefended, as their spies had reported; they capture and burn it, and build a city of their own on the site, which they name Dan. They put the idol which they took from Micah in the holy place and install the priest. — Some slight redundancies in v. 27–29 may be attributed to the hand of the editor; v. 30, 31 probably come from the two chief sources of the story. — 27. They took what Micah had made] his whole apparatus; perhaps the name of the object (ephōd and teraphim) has been omitted in order to make the statement more general. — They came to Laish, &c.] see v. 1.

— Put the inhabitants to the sword and burned the city] cf. 1<sup>8</sup> and 1<sup>25</sup>. — 28. Cf. v.<sup>7</sup>, and v.<sup>9</sup> G. — It is in the valley which belongs to Beth-rehob] this note on the situation of Laish-Dan may be by a later hand. Beth-rehob is otherwise unknown. It cannot be the place named in 1<sup>31</sup> among the cities which Asher was unable to conquer (see also Jos. 19<sup>28.30</sup>).* More probably it is the Rehob of Nu. 13<sup>21</sup> (P), the northern limit of the exploration of Moses' spies. In the verse just cited the name of Rehob stands by the side of the Gateway of Hamath,† but there is no grammatical connexion between the two, and it is not impossible that the latter is a gloss to Rehob. Beth-rehob is mentioned also in 1 S. 14<sup>47</sup> G, in the list of Saul's conquests, in connexion with Zobah. ‡ It was in the 10th century B.C. an Aramaean state (2 S. 10<sup>6.8</sup>). § Robinson would put Beth-rehob at Ġebel Hūnin, where there are ruins of a fortress, in a commanding position. || Others have thought of Qal'at Buṣra, about an hour north of Dan. If we were disposed to add one more to these guesses, we might with greater probability conjecture that Beth-rehob was the ancient name of Paneas. — 29. They called the city Dan, after the name of their ancestor Dan, who was born to Israel] Gen. 30<sup>5f</sup>; the last words, unnecessarily emphasizing the genealogical relation, may be a gloss. — Whereas Laish was the name of the city originally] cf. 1<sup>10.11.23</sup>, and for the expression, Gen. 28<sup>19</sup> (R); the notice is superfluous here, after v.<sup>27f</sup>, and may be an editorial note. This is the only case in the O.T. in which a city bears the name of a tribe; probably the population of the city substantially made up the tribe. — 30, 31.¶ The two verses are plainly parallel; each tells how the Danites set up Micah's idol in their new sanctuary, and how long the cultus thus established lasted. Verse<sup>30</sup> probably belongs to the first version of the story in ch. 17, v.<sup>31</sup> to the second. The author of the former must have given at the outset some account of the priest from Bethlehem who is now abruptly introduced in 17<sup>8</sup> as the man, and it is not a violent supposition that Jonathan's name and pedigree originally stood there. The editor who united this with the other version, in which the young Levite lived in

Micah's neighbourhood, omitted the antecedents of 17<sup>8</sup> and inserted the pedigree in 18<sup>30</sup>, where probably only the name Jonathan originally stood. The hand of an editor\* may perhaps also be recognized in the last words of v.<sup>30</sup>, till the depopulation of the land; the author of the narrative probably lived before 734 or 722 B.C.\* — 30. The Danites set up for themselves the idol] v.<sup>31a</sup>. If our hypothesis about the source of the verse be correct, idol (pesel) may have been substituted by an editor for an original ephōd. — Jonathan the son of Gershom the son of Moses and his descendants were priests to the tribe of Dan] Gershom, the eldest son of Moses, Ex. 2<sup>22</sup> 18<sup>3</sup>. In  $\aleph$  an n is inserted above the line, to indicate that this priest of an idolatrous cult was rather a son of the idolatrous king Manasseh (2 K. 21) † than of Moses; see critical note. That the priests of Dan claimed a Mosaic lineage is a fact of very great interest. ‡ It was not the only Mosaic priesthood in Israel, as is clear from Dt. 33<sup>8</sup>, and from the patronymic Mushi among the Levites (Nu. 3<sup>33</sup> 1 Chr. 6<sup>19</sup> (6<sup>4</sup>) &c.). — Down to the time of the depopulation of the land] probably the deportation of the people of Northern Galilee by Tiglath-pileser in 734 (2 K. 15<sup>29</sup>) is meant. § If the clause is from the hand of an editor, however, it is possible that it refers to a still later time. — 31. As long as the house of God was at Shiloh] on Shiloh see below on 21<sup>19</sup>. The house of God: cf. 1 S. 1<sup>7.24</sup> 3<sup>15</sup>; the passages in Samuel make it quite clear that a temple, not a tent, is meant. || How long this temple stood is not known. ¶ Bertheau thinks that there must be some closer connexion between the cessation of this cultus at Dan and that at Shiloh, and finds it in the religious changes introduced by Jeroboam I. His new temple at Bethel, with its image of Yahweh in the form of a bull, so overshadowed the older

§ Cler., Nöld., Köhler, Stud., Be., al. mu. sanctuary at Shiloh, which had lost its holy ark, that it fell into decay; the splendid image which he set up at Dan (1 K. 12<sup>29</sup>) took the place of the old idol stolen from Micah. We cannot see, however, why, if the author meant, to the time of Jeroboam ben Nebat, he should have expressed himself so obliquely. Jeroboam's image of the bull at Dan need not have supplanted the older idol.*

(§ 906 c), Barth, Buhl, al., as passive Kal. — 30, 31. Kue. (HCO<sup>2</sup>. i. p. 359 f.) thinks that the two verses are by different hands, but neither of them the original close of the story, of which at most only fragmentary remains may be preserved in v.<sup>31</sup>. We. formerly (following Stud.) regarded v.<sup>31</sup> as genuine, v.<sup>30</sup> as an interpolation (Bleek<sup>4</sup>, p. 199); † this opinion he subsequently modified: the two verses prob. do not belong together, but there is no reason to think that v.<sup>31</sup> is older than v.<sup>30</sup> (Comp., p. 357). Bu. ascribes v.<sup>31</sup> to the first narrative, v.<sup>30</sup> to the second: Jonathan ben Gershom is not the priest whom the Danites carried off, for in that case his name would have been given at his first appearance (17<sup>8</sup>); he must therefore belong to the other version of the story, according to which the young Levite did not accompany the Danites; Jonathan is the priest whom they got in his place, — whence and how, we are not told, — when they set up their sanctuary. But, as has been said above, it is not likely that the author of the second account would have said so much about this young Levite in the beginning of the story, if he played no part in the sequel (see p. 395); nor is it probable that, if Jonathan was not Micah's priest at all, but was procured by the Danites from elsewhere, the author would have failed to say something more about him. — 30. יהונתן בן מנשה [גרישם בן מנשה] many codd. and old edd. have מנשה; see De Rossi ad loc. and Appendix, vol. iv. p. 227. ‡ G<sup>N</sup> has Moses, which also stands, by the side of Manasseh, in the conflate text of G<sup>M</sup>, Thdt., g, Bar Hebr.; G<sup>ABLO</sup> have Manasseh; L Moysi; S Manasseh, but Ephr. is admitted, was the son of Moses, but because he (Jonathan) acted like Manasseh the text connects him with Manasseh; a similar explanation may be given of 17<sup>l</sup>, which connects him with Judah, Manasseh's tribe.* This interpretation is repeated by the Jewish commentators; e.g. Ra.: for the sake of Moses' fair fame n is inserted to change the name; and it is written above the line to show that it is not really Manasseh but Moses; see also Ki. on 17<sup>l</sup>, Rashbam on Baba bathra, l.c., Norzi ad loc., al. Glosses to the same effect are found in a number of codd. of H; Kennicott, Dissert. generalis, ed. Bruns, p. 41, 497, 522. Tanchum offers a different hypothesis: the name is written thus to hold the balance between discrepant traditions. It was left for Protestant theologians (Schm., Cler., Hottinger, al.) to be more scrupulous than the Jews, and defend the reading Manasseh.† In the genealogical system Gershon or Gershom ‡ is the first-born son of Levi; in P the Gershonites are one of the three branches of the tribe of Levi, though altogether overshadowed by the Kohathites to whom Aaron belonged. In the allotment of Levitical cities (Jos. 21<sup>27-33</sup> 1 Chr. 6<sup>71-76</sup>) the Gershonites have all the northern cities (in East Manasseh, Issachar, Asher, Naphtali). The interpretation of these facts, in the light of our verse, seems to be that the priests at Dan and other northern sanctuaries like Kedesh, and Golan beyond Jordan, formed a group (Gershonites) which traced its lineage to Moses. The importance of these priesthoods declined as the northern sanctuaries were more and more eclipsed by those of the central, and eventually the southern tribes (Kohath, Jos. 21<sup>20-26</sup> 9ff.). Gershonite Levites were, in the genealogical apprehension, descendants of a Gershon ben Levi, who takes the place of the Gershom ben Mosheh of our text; cf. Eleazar ben Aharon and Eliezer ben Mosheh. § — 31. וישמו להם את הפסל 1 K. 12<sup>29</sup> 2 K. 21<sup>7</sup> Jer. 7<sup>80</sup> 32<sup>84</sup> (Stud.).

XIX.-XXI. The tribe of Benjamin is nearly exterminated by the other Israelites. ||

The second of the supplementary narratives gives the story of the war with Benjamin, its cause and consequences. — The concubine of a Levite residing in the Highlands of Ephraim deserts him and returns to her father's home in Bethlehem of Judah (19<sup>1f</sup>). He follows her to bring her back. After tarrying for several days, they set out on their return late in the afternoon, and are constrained to halt for the night at Gibeah, where they find entertainment in the house of an old man who is not a native of the place (v.<sup>3-21</sup>). The men of the town set upon them as the Sodomites upon Lot's guests; the Levite surrenders his concubine to them, and in the morning finds her dead on the threshold (v.<sup>22-27</sup>). He proceeds to his home, cuts the woman's body in pieces, and sends messengers through the land, calling on Israel to avenge the outrage (v.<sup>28-30</sup>). — The Israelites assemble, four hundred thousand strong, hear the cause, and resolve to punish the men of Gibeah as they deserve (20<sup>1-11</sup>). They demand of the Benjamites the surrender of the guilty men; but the Benjamites refuse and prepare for war (v.<sup>12-17</sup>). After consulting the oracle, the Israelites join battle, but are worsted (v.<sup>18-21</sup>). The second day they have no better success (v.<sup>22-25</sup>); but on the third day, by a stratagem, capture Gibeah and cut the Benjamite army to pieces; a remnant of six hundred men escapes to the wilderness (v.<sup>26-47</sup>). The towns of Benjamin are burned, and all their inhabitants, men, women, and children, put to the sword (v.<sup>48</sup>). — From the slaughter the Israelites return to Bethel, in great distress that a tribe is lacking in Israel. For though six hundred men survive the battle, all the Israelites have sworn not to give their daughters in marriage to men of Benjamin (21<sup>1-7</sup>). They send an expedition against Jabesh in Gilead, which alone of all the cities of Israel failed to send its contingent to the great levy, with orders to slay all its people, only saving alive the virgin girls. In this way they procure wives for four hundred of the Benjamites (v.<sup>8-14</sup>). Two hundred being still lacking, they counsel the Benjamites to conceal themselves in the vicinity of Shiloh at the time of the annual feast of Yahweh, and when the maidens of the place come out to dance in the vineyards to carry them off by force; promising to appease the girls' fathers and brothers. This plan being successfully carried out, the Israelites disperse to their homes (v.<sup>15-25</sup>).

The narrative of the war with Benjamin is altogether different from any of the other stories in the book.* The numbers are exaggerated to absurdity: the levy of Israel is four hundred thousand men ; the Benjamites muster twenty-six thousand.* In the first two days' fighting the Israelite loss is forty thousand men, while the Benjamites do not lose a man ; on the third day the tables are turned, and the Benjamites are almost annihilated, with an apparent loss of only thirty men on the other side. The spontaneous and united action of all Israel is even more surprising than the prodigious numbers. It is perfectly clear from the stories of the judges that there was in this period no union of any kind among the Israelite tribes. Leaders like Ehud, Gideon, and Jephthah have at their back only their immediate clansmen, or at most a group of neighbouring tribes ; and their success sometimes excites the fierce jealousy of others (8<sup>1ff.</sup> 12<sup>1ff.</sup>). Even in the great struggle with the Canaanites under Sisera, in which all that Israel had gained in Central Palestine was imperilled, Deborah was unable to unite all the tribes in the common cause ; not only Judah and Simeon, who are not even named, but Reuben, Gad, Dan, and Asher stood aloof. But in ch. 20 21 all the twelve tribes are gathered together as one man, "from Dan to Beersheba, and the land of Gilead," and, without a leader, consult and act as if by a common instinct. This singular unity, it is to be observed further, is not political, but religious ; it is not as a nation or a people that Israel acts, but as a general assembly of the church ; the only officers who are named are the "elders of the congregation." This is in glaring contrast to the pictures of the religion of old Israel which the Book of Judges gives us ; the conception of Israel as a church instead of a people or a nation is characteristic of the post-exilic stratum in the Hexateuch and of the Book of Chronicles.† The language of Jud. 20, also, puts it in the same company. These evidences of very late date are, in the main, confined to ch. 20 21<sup>1-14</sup> ; ch. 19 and the end of ch. 21, on the contrary, are of the same general character as the other stories in the book ; ch. 19 has an obvious affinity with ch. 17 18 ; 21<sup>19ff.</sup> has eminently the note of antiquity.

* In the Song of Deborah the fighting strength of the tribes is put down at forty thousand. The only numbers in the Book of Judges which are comparable to those in ch. 20 are those given for the losses of Midian (8<sup>10</sup>).

† Such a conception could only arise at a time when the national life of Israel was a thing of the remote past.

The most probable explanation of these facts is, that a contemporary of the Chronicler took the old story in hand, and put in place of the original account of the way in which the other Israelites punished the outrage at Gibeah his own representation of the way such a thing should be done by the congregation. In this composition, which is of the nature of Midrash, the author probably followed the order of the older narrative and in considerable part preserved its language. Traces of the later hand may perhaps be recognized in ch. 19 also. It is possible that the older text was itself composite; in 19<sup>5-15</sup> the story is redundant and confused, and more than one attempt has been made to solve the difficulties by analysis, but without conspicuous success.* The oldest form of the story may perhaps be derived from J.

The historical character of ch. 20 21<sup>1-14</sup> will scarcely be seriously maintained; in the whole description of the war there is hardly a semblance of reality. But the old story must also have related how the report of the crime at Gibeah excited the horror and indignation of the Israelites, and how, when Benjamin refused to surrender the guilty parties, they not only vowed to interdict the connubium with that tribe, but visited them with savage retribution which even threatened the existence of the tribe (see esp. 21<sup>18ff.</sup>). That this narrative has an historical basis, I see no reason to deny. It is, of course, incredible that the tribe of Benjamin was almost exterminated only a generation or two before the time of Saul; but the events related in these chapters probably fall in a much earlier period, and the catastrophe, serious as it evidently was, cannot have had anything like the proportions given to it by the later writer in ch. 20. Nor does it appear to me at all probable that the whole story is a fiction inspired by Jewish hatred of Saul and all the places which were associated with his memory.†

In Hos. 9<sup>9</sup> the prophet declares that Israel in his day has sounded the depths of depravity, "as it did in the days of Gibeah"; in 10<sup>9</sup> we read, "From the days of Gibeah thou hast sinned, O Israel." The older commentators generally understood

these verses to refer to Jud. 19-21.\*  $\mathcal{U}$ , however, interprets 10<sup>9</sup> of the choice of Saul as king,† and this interpretation has recently been revived by Wellhausen and others.‡ The outrage at Gibeah, Jud. 19, is not to be laid at the door of Israel, which so promptly and severely punished the perpetrators; and the crime, atrocious as it was, did not make an epoch in Israel's career of wickedness. On the other hand, Hosea regards the making of other kings beside Yahweh as apostasy, just as truly as the worship of other gods beside him.§ The context of Hos. 10<sup>9</sup> is very difficult, and v.<sup>9b</sup>, which we should expect to throw light on the meaning of v.<sup>9a</sup>, is itself hopelessly obscure. Wellhausen's argument, however, does not seem to me convincing. The crime of the Benjamites of Gibeah, in the ancient way of thinking, brought guilt upon all Israel; it defiled Yahweh's land and people. That Israel expiated it in the blood of the offenders did not undo the deed, which might well serve the prophet as a type of abominable depravity, the first plunge into that depth to which all Israel had now sunk. On the other hand, if Hosea had meant, "From the days when Saul of Gibeah was made king at Gilgal" (1 S. 11<sup>15</sup>), he would hardly have expressed himself in the enigmatical phrase, "From the days of Gibeah."|| It does not necessarily follow that Hosea had read Jud. 19-21 even in its original form; though if the oldest version of the story comes from J, it is not impossible that he may have done so.

well be doubted whether the narrative has any basis of historic fact; that the author is animated by hatred of the Benjamite kingdom is manifest. Most other scholars recognize that an older story underlies the work of the post-exilic author or is combined with it. Bertheau thinks that two strands are to be found in ch. 19, and in ch. 20 21 offers the following analysis: A, 20<sup>1</sup>. 2b-10. 14. (18). 19. 24-28. 29-36a. 47 21<sup>5-14</sup>; B, 20<sup>2a</sup>. 11-13. 15-17. 20-23. 36b-44. 45. 46. 48 21<sup>1-4</sup>. 15-23. But the formal criteria upon which Be. mainly relies, such as the use of בני ישראל in A, איש ישראל in B, are insufficient, and his results by no means satisfactory. Budde finds in 19<sup>5-15</sup> clear evidence of double narration, which cannot be explained as mere redundancy or by assuming interpolations. Compare, e.g. the parallel clauses (different number) in v.<sup>9b</sup>, v.<sup>10a</sup> with v.<sup>11a</sup>, v.<sup>11b</sup>. 12 with v.<sup>13</sup>, the change of number in v.<sup>15</sup>, the multiplication of terms for the close of day in v.<sup>8</sup>. 9. 11. To separate the two strands seems impossible; Be.'s attempt is rejected. From v.<sup>16</sup> on the narrative runs smoothly and straightforward. Both sources are old; throughout there is the closest affinity not only to Gen. 19, but to other old portions of the Pentateuch and Samuel;* one of them is probably J. In ch. 20 the surest criterion is the place where the Israelites assemble: in the older source Mizpah, in the later Bethel. Bu. accordingly analyzes the chapter as follows: A (Mizpah), 20<sup>1a</sup>. b. 3b-10. 3a. 14. 19. 29. 36b-38. 40-42a, part of the very confused conclusion; B (Bethel), 20<sup>1a</sup>. 2. 11-13. 15. 17. 20-28. 30-33a. 34a. 35-36a, part of the closing verses. Verse 39 is introduced in A in conformity with B; v.<sup>39b</sup>. 34b in like manner are intruded in B after A; v.<sup>16</sup>. 18 are glosses derived from 3<sup>15</sup> and 1<sup>1</sup>. 2; so are also v.<sup>27b</sup> and v.<sup>28</sup> to הָרֶם. In ch. 21 Bu. ascribes to A, 21<sup>1</sup> (?). 15. 17a. 18. 19*. 20b-22. 23; to B, v.<sup>2-5</sup>. 9. 10. ... 12*. 13. 14a. 24; v.<sup>16</sup>. 17b. 19*. 20a are editorial interpolations in A; v.<sup>6-8</sup>. 11. 12* in B.† In ch. 20 21 B is certainly post-exilic and entirely unhistorical; the union of A and B may be the work of the editor who added ch. 17-21 to the Deuteronomic Book of Judges; in any case the fusion of A and B must have taken place at a very late time. Kuenen's explanation is, that a Judæan story, which originated in the days of the kingdom, was thoroughly worked over in, or more probably after, the exile, in the spirit of Judaism. The chapters give plain evidence, not of the fusion of two sources, but of successive amplification and correction: 20<sup>27b</sup>. 28a are inserted to remove a perplexity which v.<sup>26</sup>. 27a might create; 20<sup>36b-46</sup> is an expansion (after Jos. 8) of v.<sup>29-36a</sup>; 21<sup>5-14</sup> an attempt to remove, at least in part, the offence of v.<sup>15-23</sup>. — The hypothesis proposed in the text (above, p. 405), that an author of the age and school of the Chronicler substituted for the middle of the original story a Midrash of his own, appears on the whole the most acceptable. It is simpler than to suppose, with Bu., that this Midrash existed separately and was united with the older story by a still later redactor. If I am not mistaken, the Midrash of the Book of Kings, upon which the Chronicler drew so largely, presents an analogous case. I should freely admit, however, that the analogy of the Book of Chronicles itself may be urged in support of Budde's theory. But Budde's analysis, like Be.'s, seems to me in many particulars unsatisfactory; and the extreme difficulty of the analysis, in a case where we should expect it to be peculiarly easy, is itself a reason for doubting the correctness of the assumption that two sources have been united by an editor.—The towns which are pilloried in this story are Gibeah, Saul's home, and Jabesh in Gilead, by the relief of which Saul became king, and whose grateful inhabitants held so loyally to him; while the Levite, who is so outrageously treated, comes from Bethlehem, David's birthplace. The coincidence is certainly striking. Güdemann inferred that the motive of the whole story was Judæan animosity against Saul:* the places and people that were most intimately associated with his history were held up to infamy; the inhabitants of Gibeah were guilty of an unspeakable crime; his tribe of Benjamin upheld them; the people of Jabesh were the only men in Israel who took no part in the holy war. Similarly Graetz (Gesch. d. Juden, i. p. 351–354); see also We. (Comp., p. 237); Kue. (HCO<sup>2</sup>. i. 363 f.). Graetz concludes, further, that the story, with which ch. 17 18 are closely connected, originated in the time of Solomon; and, unquestionably, such an animus would be more easily explained in the early years of the Judæan kingdom than after the exile, when We. supposes that the chapters were written. The analysis leads us to make a distinction, however, which these critics do not observe. The crime at Gibeah is narrated in the old story; Jabesh in Gilead appears only in the post-exilic supplement. It is by no means impossible that the history of Saul may have furnished the association which led the later writer to fix on Jabesh as the place which, at least by neutrality, showed its sympathy with Benjamin; but the connexion is entirely secondary, and the coincidence on which Güdemann's theory rests is not original.

* See Bu., p. 149 f., where a number of these parallels are collected.

Bethlehem.*—2. His concubine committed fornication against him] so MS. The text is suspicious; the older Greek version reads, was angry with him; see critical note.—She went from him to her father's house, to Bethlehem of Judah, and was there some time, four months] the last words are in loose apposition, and may perhaps be a gloss (cf. 20<sup>47</sup>).—3. The man followed her to her home.—To speak affectionately to her, to bring her back] cf. Gen. 34<sup>3</sup> and especially Hos. 2<sup>14</sup>. On the text see critical note.—He had with him his servant and a pair of asses] v.<sup>10.19</sup>; to carry the necessary provisions for the journey, and for the woman to ride.—And she brought him into her father's house] if the text be sound we must imagine that he first apprised the woman of his coming, and that she met him and took him home. But the oldest Greek version has simply, he went to her father's home, and it is not improbable that here, as in the first half-verse, ℣ has been altered in consequence of the feeling that, as the man was the injured party, it should be the woman who tried to win him back.—When the girl's father saw him, he came gladly to meet him] ℣ renders well, occurrit ei laetus. The separation was a disgrace which the restoration of the man's favour removed.

1. אשה פילגש [see on 4<sup>4</sup>, p. 114.—2. ותונה עליו פילגשו] there is no exact parallel to the construction; ננה is elsewhere construed with מעל, מאחר, מחח, once with חתח; observe also ותונה, instead of the normal ורנן. Of the versions BN ℣ represent ותונה, which they interpret, with Jewish commentators, she deserted him; see Ra., RLbG., Abarb., cf. Ki.; ℣ ובסתר עולוי she despised him, spurned him.† APVLMO ℣ ε ε καὶ ἀπεστρεψεν αὐτῷ, following which Dathe conj. ורננו (cf. Neh. 2<sup>19</sup>); Bō. proposed ורננה; Schleusner, Stud., Ew., We., al. prefer ותונה, which, however, is regularly transitive. Another hypothesis is that the original text, represented by GA al., was ורננה עליו,‡ which was corrupted to ורננף (she committed adultery), and that the reflection that she was not a wedded wife led to the substitution of ותונה (she committed whoredom). The Jewish interpreters found the text very difficult: How could a concubine, who was neither wife nor slave, commit adultery against her lover? If she

4. His father-in-law, the girl's father, detained him] concubinage with a free woman is a species of marriage, and brings the man into the same kind of relation to the woman's family as ordinary marriage; cf. v.<sup>5</sup> 15<sup>6</sup> 8<sup>31</sup>; see also comm. on 1<sup>16</sup>. Perhaps the synonymous phrases, his father-in-law, and the girl's father, come from different sources; cf. also v.<sup>5.9</sup>. In v.<sup>5.9</sup> the Levite is several times on the point of setting out, but is over and over again persuaded to postpone his departure. The lingering of the narrative, the multiplication of identical or equivalent phrases, the alternation of singular and plural verbs, and especially the doublets in v.<sup>9</sup>,* give ground for the surmise that two versions of the story have been united; but the attempts to analyze the verses have not been successful. The solution which appears to me most plausible is, that in the first account the Levite remains three days with his father-in-law; on the fourth day, as he is preparing to depart, his host persuades him to fortify himself for the journey by a meal; they linger over the table till afternoon, when, declining an urgent invitation to spend another night, the Levite with his companions sets out on his return (v.<sup>4-6a. 8aβ. b. 9*</sup>). In the other version they feast together on the day of the Levite's arrival (v.<sup>6a</sup>); the girl's father invites his guest to pass the night there; in the morning he urges him to stay another night; on the third day detains him for a feast, as in the other account, and reluctantly allows him to depart, late in the day (v.<sup>6. 7. 8aα. 9*</sup>).† — 5. On the fourth day they rose in the morning and prepared to go] ~~He~~ and he stood up to go. If the words belong to the original narrative, the verb should probably be put in the plural, as in the translation above. — Stay thy stomach] lit. heart, v.<sup>8</sup> Gen. 18<sup>5</sup>.* — A bit of bread] Gen. 18<sup>5</sup> 1 K. 17<sup>11</sup>; it is becoming in the host to depreciate the meal which he offers to his guests. — 6. So the two men sat, and ate and drank] the woman, of course, did not eat with them; compare again Gen. 18. The verse is perhaps the original sequel of v.<sup>3</sup>. — And the girl's father said to the man, Consent now, and spend the night] for the verb see on 17<sup>2</sup>, † cf. 17<sup>11</sup>. — And enjoy thyself] 16<sup>25</sup>; here, as often, of the hilarity of the table. — 7. When the man arose to go] we are probably to understand that he accepted the invitation of v.<sup>6b</sup>; the next morning, when he was making ready to go, his host insisted on his staying another day. — His father-in-law urged him, and he passed the night there again] urged him, Gen. 19<sup>3</sup> 33<sup>11</sup>. — 8. He arose on the morning of the fifth day] the fusion of the two narratives seems to have added one to the number of days. — And tarry till the day decline] an invitation to tarry till afternoon before beginning a long journey is in itself strange, and appears still more strange beside v.<sup>9</sup>, where the advanced hour of the day is urged as a reason why they should not set out till the following morning. Perhaps the author wrote, so they tarried (a change of but one letter in Hebrew). On the variations of the Greek translators see note. — 9. The repetitions in this verse are rendered the more striking by the abrupt changes of number. The invitation to stay over night is given twice, and in both cases the lateness of the hour is urged as a reason for doing so. The language in both instances is extraordinary, and there are other reasons for thinking that the Hebrew text is not intact. It seems necessary to adopt the emendation suggested by G<sup>L</sup> al.: See, the day has declined toward evening; spend the night here to-day also, and enjoy thyself, which gives a perfectly good sense and construction. See critical note. — And you shall arise early in the morning for your journey, and thou shalt go to thy home] lit. thy tent. The last clause may come from the parallel narrative; in view of the unusual expression it is, however, more probably a gloss.

* In v.<sup>9</sup>, however, textual criticism has a word to say.

5.  $\text{סָעַר־נָא לִבְכָּךְ}$  v.<sup>8</sup>  $\text{סָעַר־נָא לִבְכָּךְ}$ . The punctuation is anomalous; in v.<sup>8</sup>  $\text{סָעַר}$  must be  $\text{סָעַר}$ , and in v.<sup>5</sup> (with conjunct. accent) can hardly be meant otherwise, though Ki. and Norzi take it as  $\text{סָעַר}$ ; see Kō., i. p. 261 f., cf. 95 f. The verb, however, has elsewhere  $\text{סָעַר}$  in impf. and inv., and  $\text{סָעַר}$  is therefore probably to be treated as a case of false analogy to forms like  $\text{סָעַר־נָא}$  from verbs imperf.  $\text{סָעַר}$ — $\text{פָּתַח לָהֶם}$  second accusative, support some one. with something, after the analogy of 'satisfy one with something' ( $\text{שָׂבַע}$ ) &c.; cf.  $\text{סָעַר־נָא}$  Gen. 27<sup>87</sup> Ps. 51<sup>14</sup>, Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 117, 5  $\text{סָעַר}$ .—7.  $\text{וַיָּשָׁב בּוֹ}$  Gen. 19<sup>3,9</sup> (literal sense), 33<sup>11</sup> 2 K. 21<sup>7</sup> 5<sup>16</sup>; see also SS. p. 600<sup>a</sup>.— $\text{וַיָּשָׁב וַיֵּלֶן}$  returned and spent the night, that is, spent the night again; 1 S. 1<sup>19</sup> &c.—8.  $\text{וַיִּחְמְמוּ עַד נִשְׁחָה הַיּוֹם}$  for the verb see 3<sup>26</sup>.  $\text{Ἀ ψοθρεύητι, Σ διάτρυπον.}$   $\text{ἔσ. 15. 18. 64. 85 mg στραγγεύητι}$  [sic] 'loiter'; hence, by a frequent uncial error,  $\text{ἔσ. For  $\text{στραγ[γ]εύεσθαι}$  =  $\text{הַחֲמִימָה}$  see Hexapla on Gen. 19<sup>16</sup> Hab. 2<sup>3,\*</sup> A different reading is represented by  $\text{ἔσ. M (59. 75. 85) Ν διεπλάνα αὐτόν}$ , or (52. 77, cf. 16. 131)  $\text{διεπλάτυνε αὐτόν}$ ; the verbs  $\text{πλανῶ}$  and  $\text{πλατύνω}$  appear elsewhere as variant renderings of  $\text{פָּתַח}$ , read as Piel or as Hiph. The translators therefore probably read here  $\text{וַיִּמְתְּרוּ}$ .† This has a genuine look. The inv. of  $\text{ἔσ.}$  must, for the reasons set forth in the text, be corrected to the impf., and perhaps the original text may be restored  $\text{וַיִּמְתְּרוּ וְג'}$ , and he coaxed him, and he lingered till the day was declining.— $\text{עַד נִשְׁחָה הַיּוֹם}$  cf. 2 K. 20<sup>10</sup>, the declining of the shadow on a dial; see also below the equivalent expressions in v.<sup>9</sup>.—9.  $\text{רַמָּה הַיּוֹם לַעֲרֹב}$  the words might be literally translated, the day has grown feeble to setting; but there is no proper parallel to the use of either verb.‡ The poetical expression is noted by We. as an evidence of late date.— $\text{הִנֵּה הַנּוֹחַ הַיּוֹם}$  these words are still more difficult; even if we let the inf. after  $\text{הִנֵּה}$  pass, § it is the camping, settling down, of the day, is an unexampled metaphor, especially in plain narrative prose.  $\text{ἔσ. Following the main road from Bethlehem to Nābulus (Shechem), they would pass to the west of Jerusalem. Jerusalem is called here, with reference to its non-Israelite population (v.<sup>12</sup>), Jebus; the same name in 1 Chr. 11<sup>4f</sup> is an intentional archaism. The common opinion, that Jebus was the native name of the city which in later times was called Jerusalem,† rests on these passages and Jos. 15<sup>8</sup> 18<sup>16.23</sup>. ‡ It has no real ground in the O.T.; against the usage of P and Chr. we may safely put Jud. 17<sup>21</sup> Jos. 15<sup>63</sup> 2 S. 5<sup>6</sup>. The question has been set at rest by the Amarna tablets,§ in which the name Urusalim repeatedly occurs, while there is no trace of a name corresponding to Jebus. Probably Jebus is merely a learned derivative from the name of the Jebusites, in whose hands Jerusalem remained down to the time of David. || — He had with him a pair of saddled asses] v.<sup>3</sup>. — And his concubine was with him] some Greek manuscripts, for completeness, add, and his servant (v.<sup>3</sup>). — 11. city.\*—14. The sun went down on them] the day was well advanced when they set out from Bethlehem (v.<sup>9</sup>); it had far declined when they passed Jerusalem; the sun set as they were by Gibeah (v.<sup>14</sup>). The sudden nightfall, which in Palestine follows sunset almost without twilight, compelled them to seek shelter at once.—Gibeah which belongs to Benjamin] 20<sup>4</sup>; elsewhere called Gibeah of Benjamin (1 S. 13<sup>2, 15</sup> 14<sup>16</sup>), or of the Benjamites (2 S. 23<sup>29</sup>), is probably the same which, as the home of Saul (1 S. 10<sup>26</sup>), is called Gibeah of Saul (1 S. 11<sup>4</sup> Is. 10<sup>29</sup> &c.), and distinct from Geba (Is. l.c., 1 S. 14<sup>5</sup>). The latter is undoubtedly the modern Ġeba', opposite Makhmās (Michmash); Gibeah cannot be so certainly identified. The similarity of the two names has led to much confusion in our texts, which greatly complicates the question.† From the present passage it appears that Gibeah was on or near the road from Jerusalem north by Ramah. Robinson, ‡ following a suggestion of Gross, § locates it at Tell (or Tuleil) el-Fūl, about half way between Jerusalem and er-Rām, and a quarter of a mile east of the main road, || and this site has been accepted by many scholars.¶ Tell el-Fūl suits the requirements of our story sufficiently well, though if we were guided by it alone we should probably prefer a site nearer to Ramah, such as Khirbet Rās et-Ṭawīl, a mile further north.\*\*—15. They turned off there] 18<sup>3, 15</sup>; the village lay on one side of the road.—He came and sat down in the public square of the town] just within the gate; Gen. 19<sup>2</sup> Dt. 13<sup>16</sup> Neh. 8<sup>1</sup> 2 Chr. 32<sup>6</sup>.—No one took them into his house to spend the night] v.<sup>18</sup>; contrast Gen. 24<sup>29-31</sup> 19<sup>1-3</sup>.—16. It is not improbable, however, that this trait, perhaps suggested by Gen. 19, was introduced by a later hand to exaggerate the inhospitality of the Gibeathites; the one honest man in the city was a stranger.\* That the inhabitants of the place were Benjamites is much more like an editor's note than part of the old narrative; the author's contemporaries can hardly have required such information.† — 17, 18. The old man sees the traveller in the square and inquires of his journey. The Levite answers that they are on their way from Bethlehem, where he has been visiting, to his home in the more distant part of the Highlands of Ephraim. The words which follow in the Hebrew text are full of difficulty: and to(?) the house of Yahweh I am going. By the house of Yahweh we must understand Shiloh,‡ or perhaps rather Bethel (20<sup>18, 26f.</sup>). Everywhere else in the story, however, and even in the immediately preceding context, we are given to understand that the Levite is returning to his own home, which is not at Shiloh or Bethel, but at some nameless (that is, to the writer unknown) place in the interior of Mt. Ephraim. This difficulty would remain in full force even if we could interpret with Schmid, near the house of Yahweh I live; § but the language does not admit this rendering. ¶, without variation, gives, and I am going (returning) to my home, which is in entire harmony with the context, and can hardly have arisen by correction of our Hebrew text; the latter may possibly have its origin in the erroneous resolution of an abbreviation. — 19. The interpretation of Schmid makes אֵת prep., and takes הֹלֵךְ in the sense of versari (like הִתְהַלֵּךְ, I walk (live) near (at) the house of Yahweh; equivalent to saying, I am a Levite. Schm. connects the words closely with the following. Bomberg's first ed. of the comm. (1518). 22-28. The Levite's concubine is ravished and maltreated so that she dies. — Verses <sup>22-24</sup> have a striking resemblance to Gen. 19<sup>4-8</sup>; it is not improbable that the similarity of the situation has led to more or less extensive conformation of the narrative in Judges to the story of Lot; see below. Wellhausen argues from the resemblance that the story is a late imitation of Gen. 19. — 22. As they are enjoying themselves at supper, the men of Gibeah surround the house, and demand that the Levite be given up to them to gratify their unnatural lust. — Vile scoundrels] U and the modern versions, sons of Belial. The phrase is an opprobrious term for base and wicked men (1 S. 2<sup>12</sup> 2 S. 16<sup>7</sup> 1 K. 21<sup>10, 13</sup> &c.); the etymology and proper sense of the word are obscure; see crit. note. — Pounding on the door] cf. In 20<sup>5</sup> the Levite speaks of the intention of the Gibeathites to kill him. Doorninck is of the opinion that our verse has been conformed to Gen. 19<sup>5</sup>; the author of the story wrote, Bring out the woman . . . that we may know her.\* But the Levite might very well represent their purpose as an attempt upon his life; while if Doorninck's restoration be accepted, there is nothing in ch. 19 to intimate that the man was in any way molested or threatened, and 20<sup>5</sup> is left without any foundation. —

* P. 131; so also Bu. In the same way the story is softened by Fl. Jos., ant. v. 2, 8 § 143 ff. Verse <sup>24</sup> must then be regarded as an interpolation from Gen. 19<sup>8</sup> (Be. Bu.); see below.

23, 24. The owner of the house remonstrates with them. He has received the strangers under his roof and protection; to violate this right is itself an infamous crime. — 23. Nay my brethren, do not do a wrong (Gen. 19<sup>7</sup>), since this man has come into my house (Gen. 19<sup>8b</sup>); do not commit this wanton deed] the last word (v. 24 20<sup>6</sup>; EV. folly) is frequently used of offences against the laws governing the relations of the sexes (Gen. 34<sup>7</sup> 2 S. 13<sup>12</sup> Dt. 22<sup>21</sup>); it does not occur in the story of Lot, Gen. 19. — 24. He offers to expose to them his own daughter and the Levite's concubine. Bertheau thinks that the whole verse has been interpolated from Gen. 19<sup>8</sup>, with which it is almost verbally identical: there is no allusion to this offer in the sequel; the connexion and movement of the narrative would be better if v. 25 immediately followed v. 23; some grammatical irregularities are also pointed out.* Such an addition, bringing the story into still closer agreement with Gen. 19, would be entirely natural; the resemblance between the two verses is too mechanical to be the result of mere reminiscence. — 25. They refuse to listen to him; cf. Gen. 19<sup>9</sup>. — So the man seized his concubine and put her forth to them out of doors] the Levite gives up the woman to save himself.† To us this seems quite as bad as the conduct of the mob in the street; but nothing indicates that the author felt that it merited condemnation or contempt. And not only the proffer of Lot (Gen. 19<sup>8</sup>), but the favourite episode of the patriarchal story, in which a wife is surrendered by her husband out of fear of harm to himself,‡ shows that the ancient Hebrews were far from possessing the chivalrous feeling which we find among the old Arabs.§ — They let her go at the approach of dawn] the first signs of day (Jos. 6<sup>15</sup> 1 S. 9<sup>26</sup>); compare the expressions in the next verse. — 26. As the morning appeared] Ex. 14<sup>27</sup> Ps. 46<sup>5</sup>. — She came, and lay prostrate at the door of the man's house where her master was, till daylight] mas-

In the morning the Levite opened the door and went out to pursue his journey.—There was the woman, his concubine, lying at the house door, with her hands on the sill] overtaken by death in the last effort to gain a place of safety.—28. The verse contrasts rudely with the pathos of v.<sup>27b</sup>. The man's speech makes the impression of indescribable brutality, but the author had no such intention.—Get up; let us go] Josephus puts the best face on the matter; the Levite supposed that she was only fast asleep.—Finding that she was dead, he put the body upon the ass and went to his home.

22. אנשי בני בליעל explained as substitution of a genitive (annexation) for apposition (Philippi, Status Constructus, p. 63; Ges.<sup>25</sup> § 130, 5); better, suspended annexation (Dr., TBS, p. 166); cf. אשת בעל אוב, בחול בה ציון, &c. In the present instance the text may be a conflation of the readings אנשי בליעל and בני בליעל; or we may restore אנשים בני בליעל 20<sup>18</sup> Dt. 13<sup>14</sup> 1 K. 21<sup>10</sup>. בני בליעל is variously rendered in G, oftenest, as here, υιοι παρανομων; * A here and usually, υιοι ἀποστασίας, Θ here Βελιαλ.† As a proper name in the form Βελιαρ the word occurs in Orac. sibyll., iii. 63, 73 (in a passage of Jewish origin), ii. 167; frequently in the Testamenta XII. Patr.; in the Ascensio Jesaiae, &c.; see Baudissin, PRE<sup>2</sup>, s.v. The oldest etymology of the word is found in Sanhedrin, 111<sup>b</sup>, בני בליעל בנים שפרקו עול שמים מצואריהם, 'men who have thrown off the yoke of Heaven from their necks' (בלי + עול).‡ So also Jerome in a gloss in his translation of Jud. 19<sup>22</sup>: filii Belial, id est, absque jugo. Modern lexicographers derive it from יעל (only in Hiph. הועיל, cf. Is. 44<sup>10</sup> Jer. 7<sup>8</sup>), in the sense of 'good-for-nothing, worthless' (Cocceius, Ges., MV., and most); or from עלה (Ki., ובל יעלה, ne'er-do-well; similarly, Hupfeld), in the sense, 'low, base' (Fürst, cf. JDMich.). These etymologies are extremely dubious; the word is without analogy in the language.—נָסְבוּ [את הבית Niph., Gen. 19<sup>4</sup> Jos. 7<sup>9</sup> c. c. על; made themselves a ring around the house.] the precise force of the reflexive is not clear; perhaps certatim pulsantes (Ges. Thes.).—23. The Qerē conforms the text to Jos. 6<sup>15</sup> 1 S. 9<sup>26</sup>; in Jon. 4<sup>7</sup> the Massora preserves בעילות השחר. — In this use כ signifies, 'simultaneously with' the action of the inf. verb; ב, 'in (at) the time of, in the course of, on the occasion of,' that action. Obviously there are many cases in which either might be used, with a scarcely perceptible difference of conception. See further, Cappell, Critica sacra (ed. The Levite publishes through all Israel the infamous crime of the Gibeathites. — 29. When he reached home, he took the knife, and laid hold of his concubine, and cut her up, limb by limb, into twelve pieces [the words employed are the proper terms for cutting up the carcase of an animal (1 S. 11<sup>7</sup> 1 K. 18<sup>23, 33</sup>); in the ritual, for the cutting up of the victim for sacrifice (Lev. 1<sup>6, 12</sup> 8<sup>20</sup> &c.).* — And sent her through all the territory of Israel] just so Saul cut up a yoke of oxen at Gibeah, and sent the pieces by messengers through all the territory of Israel (1 S. 11<sup>7</sup>), to raise the Israelites for the relief of Jabesh Gilead. In Saul's case, the significance of the act is explained: so it shall be done to the cattle of every man who does not join Saul for the war; here the object can only be to excite the horror and indignation of all beholders. It has been suspected that the verse before us is modelled after 1 S. 11<sup>7</sup>.*—30. The Hebrew tenses at the beginning of this verse can only be taken as frequentative: † And it would come to pass that every one that saw it would say, Such a thing has not happened, &c. The oldest Greek version, however, had a different introduction to the verse: And he charged the men whom he sent out, saying, Thus shall ye say to all the men of Israel, Did ever a thing like this happen, from the day when the Israelites came up from Egypt to this day? Take counsel about it and speak out. The last clause is much more natural in the mouth of the Levite or his messengers than of those to whom his message came, ‡ and the text represented by G is on every ground to be preferred; see critical note.

* If the twelve pieces are meant to correspond to the twelve tribes of Israel (Ra.), we should be inclined to regard the words as a later addition to the story; there is no trace in the Book of Judges of the system of twelve tribes. Perhaps, however, they are merely the twelve joints of the limbs, the head and trunk not being included.

united by a redactor, who harmonized them as well as he could by introducing into each the distinctive features of the other, a procedure which greatly increases the difficulty of analyzing the chapter.* Kuenen, on the other hand, regards the later element in the chapter as merely an expansion and exaggeration of the old story by a writer of the age and spirit of the Chronicler. The difference between these two theories is not as great as appears at first sight; for Budde also would doubtless acknowledge that the second narrative is based upon the first, which it follows closely; the question resolves itself into this: did the later version ever exist separately? I have given above (p. 407 f.) the considerations which incline me to think, with Kuenen, that it did not; but freely admit that these reasons are not decisive.

XX. 1-10. The Israelites assemble, hear the Levite's story, and resolve to punish the perpetrators of the outrage.—The verses are in the main from the older narrative; v.<sup>1aβ. 2</sup> are clearly by a later hand, and in the following verses some expressions suggest that the original has been here and there retouched; whether any part of v.<sup>9. 10</sup> is derived from the older source is doubtful.—1. And all the Israelites went out] for war; see on 2<sup>15</sup> (p. 73). The last words of the verse, to Yahweh to Mizpah, come from the same source, but can hardly have been the immediate continuation of the first clause; we should expect some such connexion as, and came together, which has been supplanted by the fuller description of the assembling of the congregation which the later writer has given in v.<sup>aβ</sup>. Mizpah in Benjamin was an ancient holy place (1 S. 7<sup>5ff.</sup> 10<sup>17ff.</sup>).† With the neighbouring Geba, it was fortified by Asa to defend the northern frontier of his kingdom (1 K. 15<sup>22</sup> cf. Jer. 41<sup>9</sup>). After the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., Mizpah was chosen as the residence of the native governor, Gedaliah, whom Nebuchadnezzar appointed (Jer. 40<sup>6ff.</sup> 41 2 K. 25<sup>23ff.</sup>); and had this attempt at reorganization succeeded, would no doubt, under Jeremiah's influence, have become a religious centre for the Jews who were left in the land. Four hundred thousand footmen who drew sword] the words are perhaps a gloss from v.<sup>17</sup>, introduced by the same hand which above added all the tribes of Israel to the principal men. With the numbers compare 1 S. 11<sup>8</sup> 2 S. 24<sup>9</sup> and the standing six hundred thousand of P in the history of the Exodus.* It may help us to comprehend the prodigious exaggeration of these figures to remember that the total strength of the German army which in 1870 besieged Paris—a city having a population of a million and three-quarters—was about two hundred and forty thousand men. The regular troops under the command of Titus at the siege of Jerusalem in the year 70 A.D. consisted of only five legions.—

3. The Benjamites heard that the Israelites had gone up to Mizpah] Mizpah, the point of rendezvous, is as nearly as possible the centre of the territory of Benjamin; the distance from Gibeah in a direct line is not above three miles. The half-verse anticipates; the negotiations with Benjamin begin in v.<sup>12</sup>. Budde conjectures that v.<sup>3a</sup> originally stood immediately before v.<sup>14</sup>.—And the Israelites said, Say, how did this crime happen] from the message (19<sup>30</sup>) they know only that a horrible deed has been committed; they now call on any who are cognizant of the facts to disclose them.—The Levite tells his story; cf. 19<sup>22-30</sup>.—

4. The Levite, the husband of the murdered woman, responded] the Hebrew, man, is as applicable to concubinage as to matrimony; cf. 19<sup>4,5</sup>, the woman's father, his father-in-law.—To Gibeah which belongs to Benjamin, I came, &c.] 19<sup>14</sup>. Gibeah is the guilty village; its name stands with emphasis at the beginning of the answer.—

5. The freemen of Gibeah attacked me] lit. arose against me.—Me they meant to kill, and my concubine they ravished so that she died] see on 19<sup>22</sup>; their purpose might very well be described as an attempt on his life, especially since his concubine actually died under their maltreatment; there is no necessary contradiction between the two verses.†—

The people resolve to punish the perpetrators of the outrage.—We will not go, each to his tent; and we will not return, each to his house] the two sentences are exactly equivalent; the latter is probably an otiose amplification by the later writer. On the other hand, the conclusion, 'until we have punished the men of Gibeah,' which we should expect here, is lacking.

9, 10. The Israelites adopt a plan. — They will detail one-tenth of the force to collect provisions for the rest; then they will requite the crime of the Gibeathites as it deserves. — In this form the verses can hardly be ascribed to the original narrator; what part of them, if any, is derived from his story, it is scarcely possible to decide. The difficulty is increased by the faultiness of the text. — 9. Before the last words of v.<sup>9</sup>, against it by lot, the verb is lacking: ¶ has, We will go up against it, &c., which may represent the original text.* In the sequel nothing is said of casting lots; most commentators suppose that one man in ten was drafted by lot to serve in the commissariat, the remainder being thus virtually chosen for active service; † but this is not altogether natural. If the missing verb is rightly supplied by ¶, we should be inclined to connect the words, we will go up against it by lot, with v.<sup>18</sup>, in which they inquire of the oracle what tribe shall first go up; and as v.<sup>18</sup> unquestionably belongs to the secondary, if not to a tertiary, stratum in the chapter, v.<sup>9b</sup> would fall with it. — 10. And we will take ten men from a hundred, of all the tribes of Israel, and a hundred from a thousand, and a thousand from a myriad, to procure provisions for the people] we are to imagine three hundred and sixty thousand men sitting down within an hour's march of Gibeah, while forty thousand foragers scour the country for provisions. ‡ These absurdities would be lessened if, with Budde, we could ascribe v.<sup>10</sup> to a different source from v.<sup>2b, 17</sup>, and regard the last clauses, a hundred from a thousand, &c., as editorial exaggeration; but this appears very haz-

* It may, however, merely be supplied from the context; ¶ have filled the lacuna differently. Bu. conjectures, We will cast lots over it (cf. ¶), which suits the following verse better, but requires a greater change in the text; see further in crit. note.

ardous; it is really only for the vast "congregation" of v.<sup>2, 17</sup> that such an organization of the commissariat is necessary. — In v.<sup>10b</sup> the text is again faulty, as may be seen with sufficient clearness in AV., "that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Israel," though the difficulty of the Hebrew text is here in good part glossed over. When they come is generally explained, when the foraging parties return; * others interpret, that the people, when they come to Gibeah, may do as the folly they have wrought in Israel deserves.† On either interpretation, the position and construction of the words are in the highest degree unnatural, if not grammatically impossible. The omission of them leaves an unimpeachable sentence and sense: to do to Gibeah of Benjamin as all the wantonness which it has wrought in Israel deserves. See crit. note. — 11. All the Israelite forces gathered together to the city like one man, as confederates] so the Hebrew text must be translated. The verse presents considerable difficulty, both in itself and in its relation to the narrative in which it stands. The city must be Gibeah, but this is not easy to reconcile either with the preceding, where the Israelites are already assembled at Mizpah in the immediate neighbourhood, and v.<sup>14</sup> where the Benjamites concentrate at Gibeah, or with v.<sup>17ff.</sup>, in which Bethel appears to be the headquarters of the united Israelites (see on v.<sup>18</sup>). The verse is doubtless one of the later additions to the narrative. The last words, as confederates, are generally thought to refer to the unanimity with which they acted, eadem mente, unoque consilio.‡

9. נעלה בגורל [עלה בגורל] ὁ ἀναβησόμεθα ἐπ' αὐτὴν ἐν κλήρῳ as if reading נעלה בגורל; in this collocation of words the verb might easily be dropped; Ki., R.Jes., al. mu., supply נעלה to complete the sense. ¶ נחמני עליה בערבא, we will be told off against it by lot, evidently connecting it with v.<sup>10</sup>; § we will cast lots upon it, in which way Cler. would complete the sense (נפיל עליה בני). § Bu. would emend נפילה בגורל and make the words the beginning of v.<sup>10</sup>; the phrase הפיל בגורל does not, however, occur in O.T. (always הפיל גורל), and is dubious Hebrew. On the whole, therefore, it seems safest to follow ¶, though it must be allowed that its ἀναβησόμεθα may be only an easy conjecture. — 10. [לִקְחָה צֶדָה לָעַם לַעֲשׂוֹת לִבְנֵי חָם] that the text is corrupt is evident at a glance. First of all, for לִבְנֵי חָם we must read לִבְנֵי חָם; they had nothing to do with Geba. Further, in the logic of speech, the three infinitives should have the same subject, viz., the foragers. If the author had meant to say, as the interpreters suppose: We will take ten men out of every hundred . . . to procure provisions for the army, that, when they return, we (or the army) may do to Gibeah as they deserve, — he would have expressed himself very differently. <sup>GA</sup> <sup>APVSLO</sup>  $\xi$  λαβεῖν ἐπισιτισμὸν τῷ λαῷ ἐπιτελεῖσαι τοῖς εἰσπορευομένοις τῇ Γαββᾶ κ.τ.έ.,\* i.e. לִבְנֵי חָם, the ptc. probably taken after the analogy of Gen. 23<sup>10</sup> (πάντων τῶν εἰσπορευομένων εἰς τὴν πόλιν), for all the inhabitants of the city. <sup>MI</sup> transposes the ptc., τῷ λαῷ τοῖς εἰσπορευομένοις ἐπιτελεῖσαι τῇ Γαββᾶ, to get provisions for the people, namely, for those who are going in to requite Gibeah, &c. Neither לִבְנֵי חָם <sup>MI</sup> nor לִבְנֵי חָם <sup>GA</sup> can be tolerated between לַעֲשׂוֹת and לִבְנֵי חָם. The general context gives no security for a more positive conjecture; the most plausible explanation is that the word came in as a gloss to לָעַם, perh. meant as inf., that they may go to do to Gibeah, &c. — 11. חֲבֵרִים in the sense of associated, allied tribes, Ez. 37<sup>16</sup>; perhaps we may compare the Ḫabiri of the Amarna tablets. <sup>GA</sup> † has for חֲבֵרִים ἐρχόμενοι (ἐρχόμενος), which is probably a corruption of ἐχόμενοι, for חֲבֵרִים; cf. Ex. 26<sup>8</sup> Ez. 1<sup>9</sup>. The versions all seem to support <sup>MI</sup>.

12–17. The Israelites demand the surrender of the guilty men; the Benjamites refuse, and prepare for war. — The account of the negotiations seems to belong entirely to the later embellishment of the narrative; v.<sup>14</sup> alone is probably original. — 12. The tribes of Israel sent men through all the tribe of Benjamin [<sup>MI</sup>, all the tribes of Benjamin; cf. 1 S. 9<sup>21</sup>. — What wickedness is this, &c.] compare the procedure prescribed in Dt. 13<sup>12ff</sup>, also Jos. 22<sup>11ff</sup>. — 13. is touching; cf. v.<sup>23, 28</sup>. — 14. The Benjamites assembled from the towns to Gibeah, to go out to battle with the Israelites] the verse is an indispensable part of the story, and probably comes from the original source, in which it would naturally follow v.<sup>3a</sup>. If v.<sup>3b-8</sup> (or <sup>3b-10</sup>) are in substance from the same source, v.<sup>3a</sup> must have been displaced; it should follow those verses and precede v.<sup>14</sup>.* — 15. The Benjamites mustered, from their towns, twenty-six thousand warriors, exclusive of the inhabitants of Gibeah, who raised seven hundred men. There is a discrepancy of eleven hundred between this total and the sum of the figures given in v.<sup>44-47</sup>, while the summary in v.<sup>35</sup> does not agree with either. In v.<sup>15</sup> 65 has twenty-five thousand, which more nearly tallies with v.<sup>44-47</sup>, but may, for that reason, be suspected of being a correction.† — Not including the inhabitants of Gibeah; they mustered seven hundred young warriors] “seven hundred young warriors” is also the number of the left-handed slingers in v.<sup>16</sup>. This identity of number and phrase is suspicious. — 16. Out of all this force there were seven hundred left-handed young warriors; every one of this number could sling a stone at a hair and not miss] see above on v.<sup>15b</sup>. Budde thinks v.<sup>16</sup> a gloss derived from 3<sup>15</sup>,‡ but neither the contents of the verse nor the tradition of the text warrant so summary a dismissal of the difficulty; v.<sup>16b</sup>, which is not suggested by anything in the context or any parallel in the O.T., has a strong presumption in its favour; v.<sup>16a</sup> may have originated in an accidental repetition of the words seven hundred young warriors from v.<sup>15b</sup>, which were then worked into the context in v.<sup>16a</sup> as well as the case permitted. I conjecture, therefore, that the author wrote: <sup>15b</sup> Not including the inhabitants of Gibeah, who mustered seven hundred young warriors. <sup>16b</sup> All this force † Cf. Fl. Jos., antt. v. 2, 10 § 156 (25,600). According to 𐤁 the total strength of the Benjamites, including the men of Gibeah, was 26,700 (v.<sup>15</sup>). In the third day's battle there fell 18,000 + 5000 + 2000 = 25,000, while 600 escaped from the slaughter (v.<sup>44-47</sup>). There remain thus 1100 to be accounted for. Ki. and others have supposed that this number of Benjamites were killed in the first two days' fighting, in which their losses are not recorded (v.<sup>21, 25</sup>); but it is hard to imagine that the author, who enters so minutely into these statistics, should have left the losses in the first two days to be learned by this kind of calculation. 12. [בכל שבט בנימן cf. 1 S. 9<sup>21</sup> מכל משפחות שבט בנימן]. In both cases the error seems to have been occasioned by a שבט in the preceding context. All the versions here render a singular. 18-28. The first two battles; the Israelites are defeated with heavy losses. — After inquiring of the oracle at Bethel what tribe shall first deliver the attack, the Israelites march upon Gibeah and take position before it (v.<sup>18-20</sup>). The Benjamites sally from the town and attack them with such fury that twenty-two thousand Israelites are left on the field, while the assailants sustain no loss (v.<sup>21</sup>). Undaunted by their repulse, the Israelites offer battle the next day on the same ground (v.<sup>22</sup>). They go up to Bethel and weep before Yahweh till evening; they consult the oracle to learn whether they shall renew the fight, and receive an affirmative response (v.<sup>23</sup>). In the second day's engagement, the Benjamites inflict on them a loss of eighteen thousand men (v.<sup>24</sup>). The Israelites withdraw to Bethel, and weep, fast, and offer sacrifices to Yahweh; they inquire of Phinehas the priest whether they shall continue the war, or desist; Yahweh bids them fight again, and promises them success the next day (v.<sup>26-28</sup>). — Verse 19 probably belongs to the original narrative; all the rest is secondary; v.<sup>23</sup>, which is absurd after v.<sup>22</sup>, seems to be a later interpolation borrowed from v.<sup>26-28</sup>, and v.<sup>24</sup> may have been inserted by the same hand to restore the connexion. This way of making war, in which the operations are immediately directed by Yahweh through his oracle, and the fighting interspersed with religious exercises, is altogether different from the wars of the judges in the former part of the book. It is not history, it is not legend, but the theocratic ideal of a scribe who had never handled a more dangerous weapon than an imaginative pen.

18. They arose and went up to Bethel] see on 1<sup>23</sup> (p. 40, 42) and 20<sup>27</sup>. As the narrative now runs, the Israelites assemble at Mizpah (v.<sup>1</sup>), then collect at Gibeah itself (v.<sup>11</sup>), where they are confronted by the Benjamites (v.<sup>14</sup>). Now they turn about and march away to Bethel, three or four hours distant to the north, to consult the oracle. The later writer was much more concerned that the "congregation" should act in accordance with correct theocratic principles than that the verisimilitude of the story should be preserved. — And the Israelites inquired of God, Who of us shall first go up to battle against the Benjamites? And Yahweh answered, Judah first] substance and phrase are obviously borrowed from 1<sup>16</sup>.* In the following verses nothing is to be discovered of such a precedence of Judah. Bertheau suspects that the verse is an interpolation in the later narrative; † but it is quite as likely that both the borrowing and the resulting inconsistency should be attributed to the author of that narrative himself. — 19. Perhaps part of the original story. — From Mizpah, where they assembled (v.<sup>1</sup>), the Israelites marched against Gibeah to punish its inhabitants as they had resolved (v.<sup>8</sup> with its original sequel). Verse 19 was probably followed by v.<sup>20</sup>. — 20. The Israelites move out for battle and form their lines in the vicinity of Gibeah. Cf. v.<sup>22-30</sup> Gen. 14<sup>8</sup>. ‡ — 21. If this is not the case, v.<sup>23</sup> must be an interpolation by a still later hand, derived from v.<sup>20-23</sup>. — 23. The Israelites go up (to Bethel, v.<sup>18-20</sup>) and weep before Yahweh until evening (v.<sup>26</sup> 21<sup>2</sup> cf. The former were wholly consumed by fire upon the altar (6<sup>26</sup> 11<sup>31</sup> 13<sup>16,23</sup>); while in the latter, after the fat was burned and the priest had received his perquisites, the rest of the flesh furnished a feast for those who brought the offering. The question why Yahweh allowed the Israelites, whose conduct in the whole affair was beyond reproach, to be so severely punished in the first two battles, was early raised by the interpreters. The answer most frequently given is, that it was because they had tolerated the idolatry of Micah and the Danites (ch. 17 18).¶

29–44. The third battle; rout and slaughter of the Benjamites. — The description of the battle is badly confused: in v.<sup>35</sup> the battle is over, the Benjamites have been defeated and twenty-five thousand one hundred of them slain; in v.<sup>36b</sup> we are back again at the beginning of the fight; the stratagem and the discomfiture of the Benjamites is narrated again, with all detail; on the field and in the flight twenty-five thousand are killed (v.<sup>44–46</sup>). The second account is clearly the older; we may perhaps ascribe to it: v. 29. 36b. 37a. 38. 39*. 40–42a. 44a. 47. † The rest is later amplification and embellishment. The stratagem has a striking resemblance to that employed by Joshua against Ai (Jos. 8<sup>14ff.</sup>, cf. especially Jud. 20<sup>37ff.</sup> with Jos. 8<sup>19ff.</sup>), but the phraseology is throughout different, nor does our narrative bear the stamp of a copy. § Doublets in the legendary history are not necessarily evidence of literary dependence. There is no reason why such a ruse, in which there is nothing very original, may not have been told, or, for that matter, practised, more than once.

29. Israel put men in ambush against Gibeah around the town ; cf. 9<sup>32, 34, 43</sup> &c. The verse seems to come from the old story, which probably proceeded to tell how the Benjamites went out to battle against the Israelites (as in v.<sup>21, 25, 31</sup>), on which v.<sup>36b</sup> would naturally follow. The next verses (v.<sup>30-36a</sup>) are in the main by the later author. — 30. The Israelites advanced against the Benjamites on the third day, and formed their line of battle as they had done on previous occasions. — 31. The Benjamites marched out to meet the enemy, and began to make a slaughter among them as on the former days. The verse is in substance derived from v.<sup>36b</sup>. — They were drawn off from the city] the words stand parenthetically in the sentence, in whose syntax they are not included ; the form of the verb is also anomalous. The clause is doubtless a gloss borrowed from Jos. 8<sup>16</sup> ; cf. below, v.<sup>32</sup>.* — On the roads, one of which goes up to Bethel and one to Gibeah, in the field] these roads are mentioned also in v.<sup>32, 45</sup>. The description here is not intelligible : there was a road from Gibeah to Bethel, on which the author may very well have represented the first encounter between the Benjamites, who marched out of Gibeah, and the Israelites, who were advancing from Bethel, as taking place ; but what shall we make of the second road, leading to Gibeah ? A number of interpreters have felt constrained to regard the Gibeah here meant as a different place from that elsewhere named in these chapters, Gibeah in the field.† Others have conjectured that Geba should be read ; others, Gibeon. But it is doubtful whether we have a right to expect of the author a clear conception of the topography ; cf. the laboured effort to tell us where Shiloh was, 21<sup>19</sup>.‡ — 32. The Benjamites thought that the enemy was routed as in the former battles ; but the Israelites were only feigning flight to draw the defenders away from the town. In substance derived from v.<sup>36b, 36b</sup> ; in phraseology patterned after Jos. 8<sup>5, 6</sup>. — 33. All the men of Israel arose from their place and formed line of battle at Baal-tamar] Bertheau understands that they abandoned their first line and fell back in feigned disorder to Baal-tamar, where they re-formed. This agrees well enough with the requirements of the stratagem, but does violence to the author's language: arose from their place cannot mean, made a stand and reformed their lines.* Nor do we escape from the difficulty if, with Studer, we treat the verb as pluperfect; the Israelites had abandoned their first position, &c. It might be suspected that the half-verse came from the older narrative, in which it would have a passable sense and connexion after v.<sup>29</sup>, but the construction is so negligent, not to say ungrammatical, that this conjecture is hardly to be entertained. Baal-tamar is otherwise unknown. According to Eusebius, there was in his days a Beth-thamar in the vicinity of Gibeah.† The name of the place was given it by its sacred palm tree, which some scholars have proposed to identify with Deborah's palm (4<sup>5</sup>); ‡ but the latter, 'between Ramah and Bethel,' is too remote. § — And the ambush of Israel rushed forth from its place, west of Gibeah] so the text is to be emended with the oldest versions; cf. Jos. 8<sup>4</sup>. 9. 19. || ¶, which has been translated in a variety of ways, is unintelligible and plainly corrupt. Meadows of Gibeah (AV.) follows ¶; Maareh-geba (RV.) ¶ is merely a transcription of the Hebrew words. The verb rushed forth is an Aramaism; the word used for west is found only in comparatively late writers.** — 34. older and better source than v.<sup>31-36a</sup>. In what follows v.<sup>42</sup> we may probably ascribe to the same source, v.<sup>44a. 47</sup>; the rest appears to be entirely the work of a later hand. — 36<sup>b</sup>. The men of Israel gave ground to Benjamin, for they relied on the ambush which they had laid against Gibeah] v.<sup>29</sup>, which belongs to this source, must have been followed by an account of the beginning of the engagement, which has been superseded by v.<sup>30ff.</sup> or buried in those verses.* — 37. And the ambush made haste and rushed upon Gibeah; and the ambush moved out, and smote all the city without quarter] the repetition, together with a change in the grammatical construction, make it probable that the second half-verse is a gloss. — 38. The time had been agreed upon by the men of Israel with the party in ambush,† for them to send up the signal smoke from the city, 39. and that the men of Israel should turn about in the battle] that upon this signal the Israelites, who were retreating in feigned discomfiture, should turn upon their pursuers; cf. the description of the execution of this stratagem in v.<sup>40. 41</sup>. This is the only construction which makes v.<sup>39a</sup> tolerable in the context. Its verb is generally translated as an historical tense, And the men of Israel turned about, which leaves v.<sup>38</sup> without any proper conclusion; anticipates v.<sup>41</sup>, where this movement is narrated in due order; and thus constrains the interpreters to take the verb turn in v.<sup>39</sup> in the opposite sense from that which it has in v.<sup>41</sup>, ‡ or to treat v.<sup>39b. 40</sup> as a parenthesis in the pluperfect, Now Benjamin had begun to kill, &c.; § — in a word, throws the whole context into confusion. — The Benjamites began killing the Israelites, and slew some thirty men. — For they thought, They are completely beaten before us, as in the former battle] cf. v.<sup>31. 32a</sup>. Budde thinks that v.<sup>39</sup> is an interpolation derived from v.<sup>31</sup>. || It seems to me, on the contrary, that v.<sup>39a</sup>, at least, is indispensable here, and that v.<sup>31</sup> is copied from it; but the phraseology has either been retouched by the author of the additions, or conformed to v.<sup>31</sup> by a scribe. The last words, as in the former battle, are probably not original. — 40. The fire signal began to rise from the city, and when the Benjamites looked behind them, the holocaust of the city was rising to heaven; cf. Jos. 8<sup>20</sup>, and for the phrase, Dt. 13<sup>17</sup>.—41. According to the preconcerted plan (v.<sup>38, 39a</sup>), the Israelites turned upon their foes, who were thrown into a panic, for they saw the disaster which had overtaken them; cf. v.<sup>34b</sup>.—42. They turned to retreat in the direction of the wilderness, hard pushed by the Israelites. Lit. the fighting clung to them. The wilderness lay to the east of Gibeah, the steep uncultivated hill-sides and ravines in which the Highlands of Ephraim break down to the Jordan valley; see below on v.<sup>47</sup>.—The rest of the verse is obscure, and has given rise to a great variety of diverse explanations. A literal translation is: "And those who were (or came) from the cities were destroying him (Benjamin) in the midst of it (or him)." The last pronoun seems to refer to the way (to the wilderness) in the first clause: the people of the towns along the line of their flight fell upon them and slaughtered the fugitives on the way.* This interpretation, which is the only one that the words appear to admit, labours under great difficulties when we try to harmonize it with the representation of the rest of the chapter. The towns between Gibeah and the wilderness were all, in the times respecting which we have more definite information, Benjamite; but even if we assume that at this early time they were inhabited by Ephraimites, it is to be supposed that the men of these towns were in the Israelite army.† The half-verse, with v.<sup>43</sup>, is undoubtedly an addition by the later writer; and in all probability he meant to say that the division which had taken Gibeah now issued from the town and intercepted the retreating Benjamites, ‡ who were thus caught between two bodies of the enemy, just as the men of Ai were in Jos. 8<sup>22</sup>, which passage seems to have suggested our verses. If this conjecture be correct, v.<sup>42b</sup> originally ran: And those from the city were slaughtering them (the Benjamites) in the midst, i.e. between them and the main body of the Israelites. The plural, the cities, may have arisen by accident, or through the propensity of scribes to exaggeration.* — 43. From the same hand as v.<sup>42b</sup>. The text is corrupt, probably in consequence of successive glosses. — They encircled Benjamin] cf. Ps. 22<sup>12</sup>. The oldest Greek translators read, they cut Benjamin to pieces, and this is probably the original text; see crit. note. — There follow two clauses whose grammatical structure stamps them as glosses. The verb in the first occurs nowhere else in the O.T. or later Hebrew, and the whole clause is not improbably a corrupt variant of the following words; see crit. note. — The last clause of the verse, as far as a point opposite Gibeah on the east, must be connected with the first verb (they cut Benjamin to pieces), and marks the limit of the pursuit and slaughter; but the text cannot be sound. The Israelites certainly did not desist from the pursuit in the immediate vicinity of Gibeah, that is, at the very start. In view of the frequent confusion of the two names, it may be conjectured that the author wrote Geba; and if Rimmon (v.<sup>45, 47</sup>) be rightly identified with Rammōn, the emendation receives considerable support from the topography.† Geba (Ġeba') lies in the line of flight from Gibeah (Tell el-Fūl) toward Rammōn, and the great Wady es-Suweinīt, with its difficult passage between Ġeba' and Makhmās, would naturally check the pursuit. — 44. The loss of Benjamin was eighteen thousand men, all valiant men. The last clause betrays its late date by its grammatical form; but v.<sup>44a</sup> seems to be derived from the old story. Its phraseology is different from that of the later writer in v.<sup>21, 25, 35</sup>, and the number of the slain is not the same. Verse<sup>45</sup>, which adds to the number first five thousand and then two thousand, thus bringing the total up to twenty-five thousand, as in v.<sup>35</sup>, has the appearance of a harmonistic artifice, and is much more naturally explained if the eighteen thousand of v.<sup>44</sup> belonged to the original data.

Apart from the grammatical difficulty, the introduction of this inv. in the midst of the narration is highly unnatural. Hitzig on Ps. 51<sup>4</sup> gives to הרב here the (Arabic) sense 'flight'; so Ew., GVI. ii. p. 498 n. In Jer. 51<sup>38</sup> the Hiph. is prob. like Aphel in Targums, 'let (cattle) tread, thresh'; Job 28<sup>8</sup>, generally rendered tread, is perhaps reach, attain, as in the Talmud (Abodah zarah, 15<sup>b</sup> = Kethubim, 60<sup>b</sup>), Syr., Arab. In the last sense the verb is taken here by Ra., Ges. Thes., MV.; they overtook them. The asyndetic perfects show that neither הַרְרִיקָה nor הַרְרִיקוּ is part of the original text. It is not a remote conjecture that the former is merely a corruption of the latter (obs. the close resemblance of the letters, and the spelling of both). — מְנוּחָה 'resting place' (Nu. 10<sup>33</sup>), peaceful, unmolested abode (Dt. 12<sup>9</sup> &c.) seems quite out of place in this context, whether we interpret at, to, or from (their) resting place; and the construction is as hard, or rather as impossible, in the one case as in the other. If the word is correctly transmitted, it must be a proper noun; it would then be better to take it, not as accus. of limit (to Menuah, Lth., Merc., Stud.), but as terminus a quo (מְנוּחָה), with <sup>BN</sup> al. ἀπὸ Nova. In 1 Chr. 8<sup>2</sup> נֹחָה † appears as a son of Benjamin (Benj. clan), and it is thus possible that מְנוּחָה may be sound. Others would take מְנוּחָה adverbially, quietly, or easily; so S., Tremell., Pisc., Winer, al., without warrant in usage. ‡ In view of the state in which the middle of the verse is, it is impossible to have any confidence in the text. — On the confusion of נִבְכָּה and נִבְכַּע, see v. 33 and above, p. 414. — 44. אַח כָּל [אלה אנשי חיל] so also in v. 46. The use of אַח before a nominative belongs to the later language, in which it is employed to give prominence to a noun, without regard to its syntax; Ges.<sup>25</sup> p. 351 f.

45-48. A remnant of the Benjamite warriors escape; their towns are burned and the inhabitants slaughtered. — Verses <sup>45, 46</sup> seem to be harmonistic additions, to bring the eighteen thousand of v. 44 up to the round twenty-five thousand of the later writer; v. 47 is from the old story, which may have gone on to narrate the destruction of the Benjamite towns and massacre of their population. Something of this sort seems to be presupposed in 21<sup>18ff.</sup>, but v. 48 in its present form is undoubtedly late. — 45. The Benjamites turned and fled to the wilderness, to the rock Rimmon. The beginning of the verse is verbally identical with that of v. 47. — And they made a gleanings of them on the roads, five thousand men] with the figure cf. 8<sup>2</sup>. — And they pursued them closely as

XXI. 1-14. To provide the surviving Benjamites with wives, Jabesh in Gilead is destroyed.—As soon as the Israelites have leisure from their bloody work to contemplate its results, they are greatly afflicted by the prospect that Benjamin will disappear altogether from among the tribes of Israel (v.<sup>2f. 6</sup>). All the women of the tribe have been slaughtered, and the rest of the Israelites have sworn a great oath not to give their daughters in marriage to Benjamites (v.<sup>1. 7</sup>); the six hundred survivors must therefore die childless and the tribe become extinct. In this perplexity they hit upon a plan which promises to accomplish a double purpose. Of all Israel, Jabesh in Gilead alone had not sent its contingent to the war. Twelve thousand men are therefore sent thither, with orders to exterminate the whole population of Jabesh, sparing only the virgin girls. In this way four hundred of the Benjamites are furnished with wives (v.<sup>8-14</sup>, cf. v.<sup>5</sup>).

The story shows in every trait the hand of the post-exilic author, and is plainly patterned after Nu. 31, in a tertiary stratum of P. The numerous repetitions may be due in part to the bungling of the author, in part to glosses by still later hands.* — 1. Now the Israelites had sworn at Mizpah, No one of us will give his daughter in marriage to Benjamin] v.<sup>7. 18</sup> cf. <sup>22</sup>. holy place, is singular ; all the more since in 20<sup>28</sup> they have already offered sacrifices there. The verse, as well as v.<sup>5</sup>, is perhaps a gloss, introduced by a scribe or editor whose mind was filled with reminiscences of the old literature ; cf., e.g., 2 S. 24<sup>25</sup>. — 5. They inquire who from among all the tribes had failed to respond to the summons ; for they had sworn that any who did not appear at the rendezvous at Mizpah should be put to death. The first half-verse anticipates v.<sup>8a</sup> ; v.<sup>4.5</sup> interrupt the natural connexion of v.<sup>6</sup> with v.<sup>3</sup> ; the style of v.<sup>5</sup> is unusually awkward and incorrect. The entire half-verse is, strictly speaking, superfluous beside v.<sup>9</sup>, but such circumstantiality is the delight of late writers. — 9. A muster of the tribes disclosed the fact that there was no one present from Jabesh. — Jabesh in Gilead] the only historical mention of the place in the O.T. is in the history of Saul (1 S. 11 31<sup>11-13</sup> 2 S. 2<sup>5f</sup>. 21<sup>12f</sup>). self lived in exile.* Why the expedition against Jabesh finds the main army at Shiloh instead of Bethel (v.<sup>2</sup>), we do not learn; most likely the writer is already shifting the scene to prepare for the story of the seizure of the maidens of Shiloh (v.<sup>19f.</sup>), though that story is in reality quite incompatible with the presence of the Israelite encampment at Shiloh.—13. The congregation sends friendly overtures to the surviving Benjamites in their fastness at Rimmon.—14. The latter return, and are presented with the women who were saved alive from the sack of Jabesh.—And they did not suffice for them so] there were still two hundred lacking. Thus the way is prepared for the introduction of the old story of the rape of the Shilonite maidens as supplementary to the capture of maidens at Jabesh.

15-25. The rape of the Shilonites.—The Israelites are at a loss to know how to provide wives for the remaining Benjamites. They advise them to conceal themselves in the vineyards around Shiloh at the time of the annual feast of Yahweh, and surprise and carry off the girls who come out to take part in the dances; and promise to pacify the kinsmen of the maidens, if they are minded to avenge the rape. The plan is carried out; the Benjamites seize a wife apiece, go back to their own district, and rebuild their towns. The Israelites return to their homes. — The story comes from the older source, but has been somewhat extensively glossed by the later writer; v.<sup>16</sup>, the topographical notes in v.<sup>19</sup>, v.<sup>24</sup> (at least in part), are of this origin. The text has suffered considerably in v.<sup>17a</sup> and v.<sup>22</sup>. — 15. The people was sorry for Benjamin, because Yahweh had brought a catastrophe upon the tribes of Israel] v.<sup>3.6</sup>; with the last clause (lit. made a breach in), cf. 2 S. 6<sup>8</sup> 5<sup>20</sup> Ex. 19<sup>22.24</sup>. The destruction of a tribe was not an issue to be contemplated with indifference. If the extinction of a family or a clan was a matter of serious concern, to prevent which every precaution was taken, much more that of a tribe. And for the same reason: it involved the cessation of the cults which were its bond of union, and that might well be fraught with malign consequences. The feeling and action of the Israelites here are entirely in the spirit of a primitive time, and by no means indicate that the story was invented at a late period.* — 16. The first half-verse, at least, is the work of the younger author, who thus attaches the old story of the rape of the Shilonite maidens to his account of the destruction of Jabesh.† — The elders of the congregation] Lev. 4<sup>15</sup>. — What shall we do for those that are left, for wives?] the two hundred who did not get wives of the girls brought from Jabesh. — For women had been exterminated from Benjamin] cf. 20<sup>48</sup>. Budde thinks that this half of the verse also is by the later hand. It seems to me to have its proper place in the original narrative between v.<sup>15</sup> and v.<sup>17c</sup>. The cause of the Israelites' regret in this version also was the apprehension that the survivors would have no posterity, and the tribe thus die out; it must therefore have contained a statement substantially equivalent to v.<sup>16b</sup>. On the other hand, in the younger context the statement is, to say the least, superfluous after 20<sup>48</sup> 21<sup>7.8-14</sup>. — 17. The first clause is generally explained: The survivors of Benjamin must remain in possession of the hereditary lands of the tribe; the

* This natural motive is no longer understood by the author of v.<sup>3</sup>, to whom the cause of grief appears to be that one tribe is lacking of the sacred number twelve.

† It would be possible to regard the verse, with the exception of the words, the elders of the congregation, as part of the original narrative; those that were left would then be the survivors of the battle. But this is superfluous before v.<sup>17</sup>, and the language is not favourable to the supposition.

victors renounce their right to divide the conquered territory among themselves.* But this, although in itself a sufficiently good sense, is wide of the text, and not in accord with the context, in which the question is, not what shall be done with the lands of the Benjamites, but how they shall be supplied with wives.† The text is palpably corrupt; from the structure of v.<sup>17b, 18a</sup>, the premises in v.<sup>15, 16b</sup>, and the sequel v.<sup>19</sup>, we may conjecture that the verse originally contained a question: How shall a remnant be saved for Benjamin, and not a tribe be wiped out of Israel? ‡ This would connect well with v.<sup>15</sup>, and with v.<sup>18a</sup>, Seeing that we cannot give them wives of our daughters. — Wiped out] made to disappear utterly; 2 K. 21<sup>13</sup> Gen. 6<sup>7</sup> 7<sup>23</sup> &c. — 18. Seeing that we cannot give them wives of our daughters] circumstantial, closely connected with the preceding. — For the Israelites had sworn, Cursed is he who gives a wife to Benjamin] v.<sup>1</sup>. This interdict of the connubium with Benjamin is the point on which the story in ch. 21 turns, equally in the original and the secondary version. It was natural enough that fathers who heard the tale of the Gibeathites' brutality should refuse to give their daughters to men of their tribe. If v.<sup>1</sup> is derived from the older source, we should probably regard v.<sup>18b</sup> as an editorial repetition, made the more necessary that, in consequence of the insertion of v.<sup>2-14</sup>, v.<sup>1</sup> was now somewhat remote.

19-22. A way discovered to evade their oath. — 19. They cannot recall their oath and dare not break it, but there is a way in which it may be evaded; the Benjamites must take their wives by force. — The feast of Yahweh is held at Shiloh annually] this feast, with its dances among the vineyards, was doubtless, like that at Shechem (9<sup>27</sup>), a local vintage festival. Budde takes these words as addressed to the Benjamites, and supposes that they were immediately followed by v.<sup>20b</sup>. This is probably the original intention of the author. — Shiloh is the modern Seilūn, whose situation is mi-

They bid the Benjamites lie in wait in the vineyards. In the original form of the story v.<sup>20b</sup> probably followed v.<sup>19a</sup>, which was addressed to the Benjamites; the insertion of v.<sup>20a</sup> was necessitated by the introduction of the glosses in v.<sup>19b</sup>; see on v.<sup>19a</sup>. — 21. When the girls of Shiloh come out to dance in the choruses] such dances in celebration of victory (11<sup>34</sup> Ex. 15<sup>20</sup> 1 S. 18<sup>6</sup>), or at religious festivities (Ex. 32<sup>19</sup>; cf. also Cant. 6<sup>13</sup>). § — Then come out of the vineyards, and seize you each his woman of the daughters of Shiloh, and be off to the land of Benjamin] compare the rape of the Sabine maidens by the Romans. || The borders of the Benjamite territory may have been two hours away. — 22. The Israelites promise their friendly intervention, if the kinsmen of the maidens threaten vengeance. — The offer of their good offices would be entirely in keeping with the character of the original narrative; but the verse abounds in grammatical faults which cannot all be laid at the door of the scribes, and it is, on the whole, more probable that it is an addition by the later writer. The text is unusually corrupt. — If their fathers or brothers come to complain to us, we will say, Grant them to them] the stolen maidens to their captors. ¶ has, Grant us them; that is apparently, as a favour to us, allow the Benjamites to keep their captives. ¶ The next clause is literally, For we did not take each

his woman in the war, which is interpreted, We did not reserve for each of them his wife, but killed all the women of the tribe ; * or, We did not procure for each of them a wife in the war against Jabesh in Gilead, in which only four hundred were obtained. † The latter is much the more probable explanation of the words, if not the only one which they admit. ‡ A better reading is found in many Greek manuscripts : Be indulgent to them ; for they did not get each his wife in the war ; that is of the women whom we took by the attack on Jabesh. ¶ we did not take, may be a correction prompted by the reflection that the war on Jabesh was not made by Benjamin, but by the speakers. Other recensions of 6 have, Be indulgent to them, that they took each his wife by war, § i.e. carried off the maidens of Shiloh, vi et armis ; see crit. note. || — The rest of the verse is also extremely difficult. A literal translation is : For ye did not give them ; now ye will incur guilt (or, the penalty), from which no suitable sense can be extorted. The renderings, else would ye now be guilty, ¶ or, that ye should be guilty, ** are grammatically unsatisfactory. Studer conjectured, For had you given them to them, you would be guilty, sc. of breaking your oath (v. 1. 7. 18) ; but as your daughters were taken by force you have done no wrong, and will do none if you leave them in the possession of their captors. This gives a good sense, and requires the slightest change in the text ; though it is not altogether free from objection ; see crit. note. — 23. The Benjamites follow the counsel, and carry off as many of the dancers as there were of themselves ; with them they return to their own territory, rebuild their towns, and dwell in them. — 24. The Israelites now at last return to their homes. — The verse is by the later author, as both conception and expression show beyond question.

‡ It would be possible to interpret : Grant us them as a favour ; for we did not in the war (with Benjamin) take each his woman (of the virgins of the tribe, whom we might have kept for ourselves, Nu. 31<sup>18. 35</sup>). Had we done so, we might now have given the surviving men wives of these captives ; as it is we must beg them of you. In conceding them you need not fear the oath ; for you did not give them, &c. But this requires us to supply too many things which must have been expressed, if this had been the author's meaning.

§ Cf. 2 K. 14<sup>7</sup>.

|| If the words be supposed to belong to the old narrative, this emendation, which is adopted by Bu., is necessary. Be. regards this clause as a gloss.

¶ RV., after Ew. § 337 c ; Be., al.

** Ra., Ki., AV. al.

We are to imagine the "congregation" religiously remaining together until the last Benjamite is married; then returning by tribes and clans to their respective territories, and finally dispersing to their individual possessions. — 25. In those days there was no king in Israel; every man did as he pleased] 17<sup>6</sup> 18<sup>1</sup> 19<sup>1</sup>; final comment on the whole history, which may have originally stood after v.<sup>23</sup>.

15. אשר פָּרַץ יהוה פָּרַץ בָּעָוָה, 2 S. 6<sup>8</sup>, David was angry, על. We must not, therefore, understand by פָּרַץ here, 'a gap.' — 16. לַנִּתְּרִים. the remainder; Jos. 17<sup>2.6</sup> 21<sup>34</sup> &c.; in the sense (indicated by the context), those who remained alive, Lev. 10<sup>16</sup>. — כי נשמרה מכנימן אשה cf. Gen. 34<sup>30</sup> 2 S. 21<sup>6</sup> Am. 2<sup>9</sup>, freq. in Dt. — 17. וַיֵּאמְרוּ יִרְשָׁת פְּלִיטָה לְבִנְיָמִן cannot be translated, there must be an inheritance for them that are escaped of Benjamin (EV.), which would require at least, יִרְשָׁתָם לְפְלִיטָת בְּנֵימִן. Bu. conjectures, נִשְׁאָרָה, פְּלִיטָה; but the context and the structure of the following clauses seem to require something like, אִיָּהּ תִּשְׁאָרָה, or אִיָּהּ תִּשְׁעָה; cf.  $\text{G}^{\text{MO}}$  πῶς ἔσται ἀλλήρος διασωζόμενος τῷ Βενιαμιν . . . καὶ οὐ μὴ ἐξαλειφθῇ φυλή, κ.τ.ε. — 18. ואנחנו לא [נוכל וג'] circumstantial; seeing that we cannot; no other explanation of the emphatic pronoun is natural. — [אָרִיר] with ptc., a construction which is very common in Dt.; cf. Jer. 48<sup>10</sup>. — 19. חָג יְהוָה Ex. 10<sup>9</sup> (J?) Hos. 9<sup>5</sup> Lev. 23<sup>39</sup>; Am. 5<sup>21</sup> 8<sup>10</sup> &c. — [מִיָּמִים יְמִימָה] annually, 11<sup>40</sup>; see note there. — 20. וַיִּצּוּ the correction of the Qerē, וַיִּצּוּ, is necessary. — 21. לְחֹלִי בַמַּחֲלוֹת Kal in this sense only here; cf. הָלָל (Polel) v.<sup>23</sup>. — [וַחֲטָמָם] Ps. 10<sup>9</sup> bis† (MH., Aram., Syr., Arab.).\* — 22. [אֲבוֹתָם אוֹ אֲחֵיהֶם] masc. suffixes, referring to the captured women. This negligence is not uncommon. — [לְרִיב אֵלֵינוּ] Jer. 12<sup>1</sup> Job 33<sup>18</sup>; for having allowed this thing to be done, or for letting it pass unpunished. — [תְּנִינֵי אוֹתָם] חָן with two accus., Gen. 33<sup>6</sup> Ps. 119<sup>29</sup>.  $\text{H}$  is supported only by  $\text{G}^{\text{B}}$  † and  $\text{C}$ . †  $\text{G}^{\text{PVO}}$  have ἐλεήσατε αὐτούς, ὅτι οὐκ ἔλαβεν ἀνὴρ γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ πολέμῳ, i.e. have pity on them, for they did not take a wife for himself in the war, i.e. the same text is represented also in a somewhat different translation by  $\text{N}$ , and by  $\text{s e}$ ,  $\text{S}$ , and is very probably the original reading. §  $\text{G}^{\text{LM}}$  omit the negative, חָן אוֹתָם כִּי לָקְחוּ אִשׁ אֶשְׁחֹרֵג, kindly forgive them that they each took his wife in war, i.e. by forcible means. This seems to me, not the original text (Bu.), but an erroneous interpretation. || — [כִּי לֹא אָתָם נִתְּחַם לָהֶם בְּעַד חַטֹּאתֵיהֶם]  $\text{H}$  is here supported by all the versions. It is impossible, however, to construe or explain the last clause. Stud.'s conjecture, לוֹ (or לָא) for לֹא, is highly probable; the two particles are not infrequently confounded in  $\text{H}$  and the versions; cf. 2 S. 19<sup>7</sup> 2 S. 13<sup>18</sup> Gen. 23<sup>11</sup>

|| Against a reading sustained by  $\text{G}^{\text{LM}}$ ,  $\text{s}$  weighs heavily; the concurrence of  $\text{N}$  is also noteworthy.

1 S. 20<sup>16 bis</sup>. See Hitzig, Begriff der Kritik, p. 141; We., TBS, Dr., TBS. on ll. cc.* If this emendation be adopted, we should also read כי עתה, the usual introduction of the apodosis after לו (e.g. Nu. 22<sup>29</sup>), instead of כעת: For had you given them to them, you would now be guilty.† The only objection to this is the tense of the verb in the apodosis (usually the perf.); but, you would be guilty, may perhaps stand for, you would have incurred guilt. — [חַאֲשֵׁמוֹ] Norzi: Baer חַאֲשֵׁמוֹ. On the dagesh see Kō., i. p. 64. — 23. [וַיֵּשְׂאוּ נָשִׁים] in the sense of 'take a wife, marry' (לקח אישה, so Stud.), נשא is late (We.); here, however, the meaning is rather tollere (Bu.). — [מִן הַמְּחֹלְלוֹת] Polel ptcp.; cf. Kal above, v.<sup>21</sup>. — 24. [וַיִּתְּחִלּוּ מִשָּׁם] Hithpa. seems to be used with the force, 'go in different directions.' — [מִשָּׁם] 1° from Shiloh; 2° from the central point of each clan.
